when I planned to retire before fifty

this is the business that made it possible

a true story by John B. Haikey

Starting with borrowed money, in just eight years I gained financial security, sold out at a profit and retired.

"Not until I was forty did I make up my mind that I was going to retire before ten years had passed. I knew I couldn't do it on a salary, no matter how good. I knew I couldn't do it working for others. It was perfectly obvious to me that I had to start a business of my own. But that posed a problem. What kind of business? Most of my money was tied up. Temporarily I was broke. But, when I found the business I wanted I was able to start it on a little over a thousand dollars of borrowed money.

"To pyramid this investment into retirement in less than ten years seems like magic, but in my opinion any man in good health who has the same ambition and drive that motivated me, could achieve such a goal. Let me give you a little history.

"I finished high school at the age of 18 and got a job as a shipping clerk. My next job was butchering at a plant that processed boneless beef. Couldn't see much future there. Next, I got a job as a Greyhound Bus Driver. The money was good. The work was pleasant, but I couldn't see it as leading to retirement. Finally I took the plunge and went into business for myself.

"I managed to raise enough money with my savings to invest in a combination motel, restaurant, grocery, and service station. It didn't take long to get my eyes opened. In order to keep that business going my wife and I worked from dawn to dusk, 20 hours a day, seven days a week. Putting in all those hours didn't match my idea of independence and it gave me no time for my favorite sport—golf! Finally we both agreed that I should look for something else.

"I found it. Not right away. I investigated a lot of businesses offered as franchises. I felt that I wanted the guidance of an experienced company—wanted to have the benefit of the plans that had brought success to others, plus the benefit of running my own business under an established name that had national recognition.

"Most of the franchises offered were too costly for me. Temporarily all my capital was frozen in the motel. But I found that the Duraclean franchise offered me exactly what I had been looking for.

"I could start for a small amount—a little over a thousand dollars—and that amount I could borrow. I could work it as a one-man business while getting a start. No salaries to pay. I could operate from my home. No office or shop rent or other overhead. For transportation I could use the trunk of my family car. (I bought the truck later, out of profits.) But, best of all, there was no ceiling on my earnings. I could build a business as big as my ambition and energy dictated. I could put on as many men as I needed to cover any volume. I could make a profit on every man working for me. And, I could build this little by little, or as fast as I wished.

"So, I started. I took the wonderful training furnished by the company. When I was ready I followed the simple plan outlined in the training. During the first period I did all the service work myself. By doing it myself, I could make much more per hour than I had ever made on a salary. Later, I would hire men, train them, pay them well, and still make an hourly profit on their time that made my idea of retirement possible—I had joined the country club and now I could play golf whenever I wished.

"What is this wonderful business? It's Duraclean. And, what is Duraclean? It's an improved, space-age process for cleaning up-holstered furniture, rugs, and tacked down carpets. It not only cleans but it enlivens and sparkles up the colors. It does not wear down the fiber or drive part of the dirt into the base of the rug as machine scrubbing of carpeting does. Instead it lifts out the dirt by means of an absorbent dry foam.

"Furniture dealers and department stores refer their customers to the Duraclean Specialist. Insurance men say Duraclean can save them money on fire claims. Hotels, motels, specialty shops and big stores make annual contracts for keeping their carpets and furniture fresh and clean. One Duraclean Specialist recently signed a contract for over $40,000 a year for just one hotel.

"Well, that's the business I was able to start for a little over a thousand dollars. That's the business I built up over a period of eight years. And, that's the business I sold out at a substantial profit before I was fifty."

Would you like to taste the freedom and independence enjoyed by Mr. Haikey? You can. Let us send you the facts. Mail the coupon, and you'll receive all the details, absolutely without obligation. No salesman will ever call on you. When you receive our illustrated booklet, you'll learn how we show you STEP BY STEP how to get customers; and how to have your customers get you more customers from their recommendations.

With no obligation, we'll mail you a 24-page brochure explaining the business. Then you, and you alone, in the privacy of your home, can decide. Don't delay. Get the facts before your location is taken by someone else. Mail the coupon, now.

Principle: QUEEN

 Black: R x B1

BOBBY FISCHER, in cooperation with XEROX EDUCATION DIVISION, has produced the most precise, most efficient and fastest method of improving your chess game ever conceived. Bobby Fischer's profound chess knowledge and unique thinking is systematically presented in crystal clear visual terms with computer accuracy. This course is a revolutionary break-through in chess instruction. There is very little to read. There is no chess notation. And you don't even have to use your chess set while you're learning. Virtually every page of this incredible course presents you with a fascinating chess problem that not only challenges your chess ability but instantly rewards you with new insights, new knowledge and new power.

If you love to play chess... and it doesn't matter whether you are just learning to play or have been playing for years... you can look forward to one of the most enjoyable and most rewarding chess experiences of your life! Bobby Fischer's Chess Course is truly as incredible as Bobby Fischer himself.

It teaches you to think the same way Bobby does. It reveals mating positions that you may never have dreamed existed. It shows you exactly how to look for, discover and exploit these mating themes in all your games. It teaches brilliant, classic defenses against mating threats... defenses you may never have discovered for yourself no matter how long you've been playing!

As you might well guess, Bobby Fischer's chess course is totally unique and totally unlike any other chess book ever written. He teaches you... literally in minutes... how to look for and recognize basic strategic situations in every game and then how to instantly apply the proper mating (or defense) tactics.

As you examine the games shown above and look for the correct mating moves, ask yourself the following vital question: Do you normally LOOK FOR and READILY RECOGNIZE CLASSIC MATING SITUATIONS... or do you constantly struggle through each and every game searching for the right moves to overcome your opponent... without ever recognizing the similarity of common mating situations?

Bobby Fischer shows you how to recognize these common mating situations. He strips away the confusion of complex play and focuses a brilliant light on basic, easy-to-learn, easy-to-recognize Classic Mating Principles.

You'll be genuinely amazed how often you'll discover instant mating situations once you've learned what to look for! You'll be absolutely astonished at how many games you'll win in the future by recognizing and exploiting these same, common mating variations.

The moment you get Bobby Fischer's Chess Course, you will quickly see how it can dramatically improve your chess game whether you are a rank beginner or a strong player. You may also discover, for the first time in your life, exactly how well... or how poorly... you really play chess. But regardless of how you play chess now, YOU WILL BE A FAR BETTER PLAYER AFTER TAKING BOBBY'S CHESS COURSE!

Dirna's a wild life buff, can name most flowers, trees and insects. When she's stuck in town, however, she can be found watching TV.

I'll bet one of your CRAZY IDEAS can make you rich!

And I'm willing to lend you a remarkable book for a couple of weeks to prove it. It shows how 206 "crazy ideas" have already made millions for people who thought them up.

Ever hear of anyone paying for an ad just to lend people a book? But then, there's never been a book like this before! If you've ever had any kind of money-making idea in your head, you've simply got to read it.

Why? Because this sensational book tells you the little-known secrets of how to make even a simple idea pay off. Not in chicken feed, but in millions of dollars.

Take a look at some of these stranger-than-fiction actual case histories!

- How a product that started on a kitchen stove grew into a $116 million business!

- How a 15¢ car pool was promoted into the world's largest bus line!

- How a door-to-door salesman, swept off the porch by an angry housewife, suddenly got an idea that grew into a business worth hundreds of millions!

- How a stone-broke 54-year-old decided to give his "crazy idea" one last try and became one of the nation's wealthiest men.

When you borrow my book you'll see the step-by-step techniques that made over 200 simple ideas pay off big. In fact, that's what this book is all about. How many of America's biggest companies started with simple ideas in home kitchens. In basements and sheds. One behind a barber shop. Another in a barn.

You'll see the strange, simple, downright inspiring ways they got started. Read about the accidents that created industries. About the basement tinkers, the husband-wife teams, even the bankrupt failures who struck it rich.

By taking this book—on loan—you'll find out how they made good. What got them started. What kept them going. And how their ideas paid off.

Just one or two of these fascinating—even thrilling—true stories may be just the spark that sets you afire. Gives you the guts to give it a try. Shows you the ways that have worked before. Inspires you to do what you're only dreaming about doing.

This big book, "Ideas That Became Big Business" is chock full of good, sound, money-making advice that's worked, hundreds of times, to the tune of billions of $! Now you can find out—free—by borrowing the book.

Originally published at $5.75 . . . now on sale for only $4.75 . . . I'm offering you a copy on loan at absolutely no cost or obligation whatsoever.

But I've got a very limited supply. So this has to be a first-come, first-served deal.

So if you have a so-called "crazy idea" that just might take off and make you a million . . . THIS IS THE WAY TO BEGIN:

Simply fill out the coupon, below. Enclose your check or money order for $5.00—that's the price of the book, $4.75, plus postage handling. I'll hold your money as evidence of good faith. But I won't cash your check. Not for at least 14 days after I've sent you the book.

That way you can return it any time within two weeks. If you do, I'll send back your check to you—uncashed—by return mail. You'll have borrowed the book for those couple of weeks at no cost.

If, on the other hand, you decide you want to keep the book—that's okay by me. Just keep it. In fact, if I don't hear from you when 14 days are up, I'll assume that's what you're doing. Fair enough?

You really don't have to decide until you've read every one of its 414 pages. But, frankly, I think you'll get as excited about the book as I am.

And I hope your crazy idea pays off . . . even better than my crazy idea of lending books to people with crazy ideas!

SAVAGERY IN ACTION- THEY PREY ON HOMOSEXUALS

Like jackals, they prowl the night to feast on the carrion of smashed lives. Now these beasts of prey have reached into the highest places.

by Charles Beach

THE Page One story that appeared in the New York Times recently shocked a good many people. The story concerned a nationwide ring of extortionists who had been preying on prominent deviates for nearly ten years.

The homosexuals being shaken down included at least two deans of eastern universities, well-known theatrical personalities and officers of the armed services. Also listed were accountants, heads of business firms, a number of professors and a much-admired television personality. The extortion ring had extracted more than a million dollars from nearly one thousand victims, with some persons paying as much as $20,000 to their blackmailers.

The story was shocking only to those unfamiliar with the shadowy world of homosexuality; to the invert it represented nothing new, nothing he hadn't experienced himself or hadn't heard about.

The fact is that homosexuals are not only being blackmailed, they are being beaten, robbed and sometimes murdered. In many cases the extortionists' threat of exposure forces inverts to commit suicide.

There are many reasons why the homosexual is susceptible to blackmail and violence. Foremost, of course, is fear of exposure. He spends his life concealing his inversion from a society of heterosexuals. He successfully hides his sexual preferences from his parents, his employer and very often his wife. Exposure to him means financial ruin and a shame from which he will never recover. It means banishment from his community and his circle of friends. Therefore, when a blackmailer demands money, the invert pays. When efforts were made recently to have a homosexual television performer testify before a grand jury in New York, he declined, saying: "I can afford to lose the money. I hope they die of cancer."

The nature of his inversion paves the way to the kind of violence that sometimes leaves the homosexual bleeding in a gutter. Dr. Edmund Bergler explains why in his book, Homosexuality: Disease or a Way of Life:

"The typical homosexual is perpetually on the prowl; his 'cruising' (the homosexual term for seeking two-minute or, at best, short-term partners) is more extensive than that of the heterosexual neurotic who specializes in 'one-night stands.' According to homosexuals, this proves that they crave variety, and have insatiable appetites. In inner reality, it proves only that homosexuality is a poor and unsatisfying sexual diet. It also shows the existence of a constant masochistic craving for danger, every time a homosexual 'cruises' he is running the often underestimated risk of a beating, an extortion attempt, venereal disease, or jail."

MALE prostitutes prey on homosexuals at every opportunity. Some are young hoodlums who loiter on street corners wearing leather jackets and long, full heads of hair. They are known as the "rough trade." A police inspector in Chicago said, "These male prostitutes, so often teenagers, view the homos contemptuously, take them for whatever they can. But of course they are no better themselves, worse if anything, and are essentially homosexual, even though they don't know it yet." Also called "fag workers," the young toughs lure homosexuals into dark areas, then rob and beat them, sometimes fatally.

At the other end of the spectrum are the male prostitutes who comprise the "smooth trade." They are usually suave, well-dressed and good conversationalists. Their "marks" are nearly always inverts in the business or professional

No, the magnificent rings on display are not mounted with natural diamonds... if they were, you would have to pay thousands of dollars for the privilege of owning one. Instead, these rings feature the Merlite DIA-SIM, an extraordinary synthetic stone which rivals the hardness, the brilliance, and the blazing beauty of a natural diamond — but which, carat for carat, is available at approximately 1/200th the price of a diamond!

The Merlite DIA-SIM is a true, high-fidelity simulation of a diamond — so faithful to the original that you, your family and your friends will be unable to tell them apart. Of course, a trained jeweler can detect the difference, but to the non-professional eye, the two stones are virtually identical.

Diamonds are noted for their hardness; as you perhaps know, a popular "test" for the genuineness of a diamond is its ability to scratch glass. Because a Merlite DIA-SIM approaches the hardness of a diamond (Mohs Scale 8 as compared to Mohs Scale 10), it too will readily scratch glass.

The pure, fiery brilliance of a diamond is the result of its high Refractive Index of 2.417. The Merlite DIA-SIM, with a Refractive Index of 1.718, captures much of the same brilliance. Equally important, the Merlite DIA-SIM, like a true diamond, is single refractive. Many imitation diamonds are doubly refractive — a characteristic that deprives them of the sharp, unblurred radiance of the natural stone.

In some respects, the Merlite DIA-SIM actually surpasses a natural diamond. Every Merlite DIA-SIM we sell is completely flawless, whereas flawless diamonds in the 1-carat to 3-carat range are seldom found in nature. And a diamond, despite its unmatched hardness, is brittle, and hence subject to chipping and shattering. But a Merlite DIA-SIM is guaranteed never to chip or shatter, for as long as you own it.

To take full advantage of these many remarkable features, each Merlite DIA-SIM is cut and polished by skilled artisans, who employ the same techniques they would lavish on the most precious natural diamond. The finished stone, with the traditional 58 facets of a diamond, is then hand-set in a luxurious, designer-created mounting of 18K heavy gold electroplate or solid sterling silver. Finally, the completed ring is housed in a deluxe Presentation Case and is issued an Unconditional Lifetime Guarantee Certificate.

But mere words and photographs cannot begin to do justice to these breathtaking creations. You owe it to yourself to see the actual rings... to feel them on your finger... to compare their dazzling stones to a real diamond. And we invite you to do so, entirely at our risk.

By using the coupon at the bottom of this page, you are entitled to order the ring of your choice without any obligation to purchase it. When your ring arrives, wear it and enjoy it for 10 full days before you decide if it fully lives up to your highest expectations. THE INCREDIBLE

The rustle of satin. A soft voice murmuring its passion. Anna knew that these things alone were all that stood between the Nazis and the Partisans.

by Roy Harper

WHEN the blast came at 3:15 P.M. on March 23, 1944, three things happened simultaneously. The tinted photograph of Il Duce crashed to the floor, splattering its glass frame over the rug. Anna Mancuso was hurled out of bed and fell on her naked rump. Obersturmbannführer Kessler of the Sicherheitsdienst lost both his monocle and his composure as he landed squarely on top of Anna.

From one of the other rooms in the Via Rassella house came the sounds of terrified female cries and male grunts of consternation.

"It is an American air raid," a girl cried, trying unsuccessfully to mask the note of glee in her voice.

"The Amerikaners will never bomb Rome!" a man answered. "The sentimental fools."

Another blast ripped the house. The walls shook and threatened to buckle. Anna fought to extricate herself from Kessler's suffocating weight.

Outside the window she could hear the screams of the dying, the obscenities of the terrified and the tink of shattering glass.

Desperately she wriggled to the window. She felt Kessler's hot breath on her shoulder. The man gripped the ledge, heedless of his own nakedness. His eyes fastened on the twisted corpses which ringed the square. His gut sucked in and his thin lips twitched perceptibly. It was as if he saw a portent of his own future in the mutilated forms of gray clad Polizei soldaten.

"My uniform and be quick about it!" he barked. He backhanded Anna across the side of her head, sending her scampering for the beribboned regalia which he had been so anxious to shed.

He was a ludicrous sight, clambering into his clothing. Anna studied him, the sensation of satisfaction glowing warm in her bosom. Only one thing would have made her happier and that would have been if Obersturmbannführer Otto Kessler had been one of the victims in the street below.

As he buttoned his tunic, Anna reached out for the Nazi. Her naked arms encircled his waist. Her tiny tongue darted wantonly between her teeth.

"You will not forget the ration cards, Signor. One could be most appreciative for them. You will come with them this evening as you promised."

Kessler shoved her roughly from him. The backs of her knees hit the bed and she bounced on the mattress. Anna made no attempt to cover her splayed out nakedness, letting the sight of it form a lasting impression on her caller. Her womanly knowledge told her what she wanted to know. Right now, Kessler's passions were spent. But they would return and so would he. It was most important that he did, for one did not always cater to an Obersturmbannführer and under the right circumstances a high placed Nazi could be a veritable fount of knowledge.

Kessler paused briefly at the door. His emotions were mixed. He was furious over the loss of his matinee dalliance with the Roman prostitute. He was fearful of what word might get to Kesselring concerning his dereliction of duty. He knew that he hungered for Anna Mancuso and felt it was damned inconsiderate of the enlisted Polizei bastards to get themselves blown off the face of the earth at the moment of his fulfillment.

"You are very lucky that I was here, Fraulein," Kessler's voice was the soul of propriety. "I will be able to vouch that nobody in your house had anything to do with the murders. I will see to it that you have a clean bill of health."

"And you will return tonight with the ration cards as you promised? I will make you very happy that you did."

"We will see. It depends on what I find down there."

As the door closed behind his hulking body, Anna Mancuso knew he would be back.

AS soon as she was alone, her manner changed. The damned fool, Giovanni—what had he hoped to accomplish by the bombing? Could one lousy detachment win the war? Giovanni was a hothead. He should have thought first.

The warning which had been posted on billboards throughout Rome flooded back into Anna's memory. She could quote it verbatim.

For every member of the German armed forces, whether military or civilian, who becomes injured, fifty men, taken from the place where the act was committed, will be shot.

RAID OF ITALY'S KISSING DAUGHTERS OF DOOM

One gurgled scream could alert the Nazis and put an end to Anna's carefully laid plans.

Things are not always what they seem and hidden forces are hard at work to smash your happiness.

By L. O. PETERSON

THE Greeks had a word for it. They called it hypochondria. They even referred to the lower portion of the abdomen as the hypochondriac area. They realized that emotions had a direct bearing on a person's physical well being.

Today's sexologists are in universal agreement that emotions are the destructive force which can cause severe damage in the physical release which should be brought about as the result of a meaningful sex life.

Dr. G. Lombard Kelly, President of the Medical College of Georgia reports that only 10 per cent of impotent men may benefit by treatment of male hormones. Ninety per cent have an adequate supply of hormones, he says. The doctor believes that in the overwhelming majority of cases the cause of impotence is psychological.

The late sexologist, Dr. Alfred Kinsey commenting on impotence in men under the age of 55 held that it was almost the result of a psychological conflict.

Dr. Leland Glover, in his book, Sex Life of the Modern Adult, comments, "Without the desire to overcome psychological impotence, a husband will not overcome it."

Here are 10 basic emotional weaknesses. Each has a destructive impact on sex potential.

1. Rage. Anger when brought to the love chamber must bruise both parties. Many men who have fallen victim of what Philip Wylie terms the momism complex seek to get even in their relationships with their wives. Whether they realize it or not, they have been conditioned to hate women because they have been aggressive mothers and sisters. They have become ashamed of their own manhood.

In order to bolster their egos, they seek to degrade and brutalize their sexual partner. They are overly aggressive in their own turn.

Some men who are afflicted with this emotional weakness find they can only have relations with prostitutes. They treat the professional viciously, using vile language and inordinate physical force. Because she is paid for her services, the prostitute accepts such treatment as an occupational hazard.

Other men gravitate towards meek and submissive women. All of us have been embarrassed at one time or another to be in the company of a couple where the husband publicly humiliates his wife by calling attention to her mental, physical and sexual failings. In destroying her, he is shrieking his rage at all women.

Still others will marry dominant woman who greatly resemble their mothers and then subject them to physical violence. Recently a group of Chicago psychiatrists reported that the typical wife beater was outwardly passive. His wife was the more aggressive of the two. Strange as it may seem, the Chicago doctors noted

THE MONSTER VAMPIRES WHO LIVED ON MAIDENS' BLOOD

by Chuck McCarthy

Obsessed with an impossible dream, she sipped from the cup of the damned as the screams of her lovely captives rang through the castle and told of horrors beyond the realm of Satan.

BLOOD! Its sweetish aromatic fragrance permeated the vaulted crypt.

Blood! It ran in rivulets down the shuddering form of the young girl whose nakedness was spread-eagled by cruel gyves which bit into her flesh!

Blood! It sloshed over the rim of the silver goblet held now to the arrogantly curved lips of the woman whose milk white breasts strained mightily to be free of the constraint of her satin bodice.

Blood! It's tableau of insipient horror spread before the distended eyes of Constance Imry. Her tear-swollen lids closed momentarily attempting to blot out the hideousness of the scene. In her self-imposed drakness, she felt their hands closing ever so tightly on her shoulders.

Their combined weight thrust against her, bearing her to her knees.

Constance whimpered against the pain of the rough stones which chafed her flesh. The hag called Ilona Joo held her by the throat while the bloated gargoyle, Thorko seized her wrists and twisted them behind her back. Constance Imry screamed. She struggled wildly in their foul grip.

But her strength was nothing compared to that of Thorko. With a diabolical deftness he applied the binding cords, drawing them so tightly around her arms that they became imbedded in her virginal flesh.

Now the village girl knelt helpless

The countess' lips were stained with the fearful beverage as she lifted the goblet for the second time. Constance, on her knees, knew at last the real horror of the ugly, forbidding castle.

I PAY OFF IN LUST

CONFESSIONS OF AN ORGY GIRL

By LOLA BRYAN

I live in a wild world where men are not what they seem and their strange cravings must be kept a dark secret. It's the world of the fast buck and the faster dame.

ORGY: 1. A wild, drunken revel. 2. Period of uncontrolled indulgence. 3. Secret rites or ceremonies in the worship of certain Greek and Roman gods, especially the god of wine, celebrated with drinking, wild dancing and singing.

That's the way the dictionary puts it. I'm not that long on culture that I'd argue the point. The only thing I'd substitute is the god of money for the god of wine.

I don't care whether it's a rented yacht rolling on a swell off Miami Beach or a posh suburban set-up in Silver Spring or a penthouse overlooking the East River in New York, the name of the game is the same. Give the visiting firemen a ball. You'll get yours in spades.

These are the big ones. They have power. Somebody wants to make use of that power. Voila! Bring on the dancing girls. Bring on me.

Call it sordid. It is. Call it juvenile. They are. Yet how well I perform my duties may determine what you pay for your refrigerator, what politician represents you or what newspaper you read. What I'm trying to say is this is big league stuff.

Let's start out with a couple of basics. Every item or commodity (including influence) has a buyer and a seller. It also meets the sternest competition from another commodity or item. What better way to enhance its competitive position than to have a girl like me ready to embark on the soft sell with the whisper of her black lace panties flutetring from her body.

How does this work in practice? Here's a wire I received recently. Water's fine. Come down. Larry. Sound like a commercial for Miami Beach's Gold Coast? It was. But it wasn't devised by a copywriter for an airline or chamber of commerce.

Larry runs a strictly private small business. He deals in products—beautifully appointed cabin cruisers. He deals in services—mine and those of other girls like me.

Larry has yachts for sale. He has yachts for hire. He is well known to a very select group of sales managers and publicity executives.

When I get a wire from Larry, it means pack your fanciest clothes. Leave your inhibitions behind. You're putting out to sea. Usually I board the next available jet and two and a half hours later I'm sprawled decorously across the fantail of a sleek job that could pass for a Navy destroyer. I have on my uniform of the day. Rudyard Kipling best described it in Gunga Din when he said, "It was a little bit before and a little less than half of that behind." Although old Rudyard never saw a 1965 bikini, his poetry is timeless.

I'm not the only girl aboard. Who ever heard of a one girl orgy? There are at least six or seven others. Like me, they all claim exotic backgrounds. We're actresses, models, commercial artists, advertising girl Fridays. Nobody calls us what we are.

That isn't because the men aboard our "tramp steamer" are bashful. Anything but. It's because they want to create the illusion they've won us in all out conquest.

I'm his for the night or the weekend. We start out like this, but before we part I know he'll turn into a foul creep who'll make my skin crawl with his wild demands.

"DANCE, MY THE WHIP'S

The shrill notes of a helpless woman's shrieks, the whistling tones of a cruel lash and the ravings of a lunatic were my overture to doom.

By LOTYA GREZ as told to JIM McDONALD

PERHAPS some day I will be able to listen to Anton Bruckner's Fifth Symphony without feeling the cancerous sickness twisting within my breast. Perhaps I will be able to hear the Love Idyll without seeing the images of helpless women swinging over my head, the vicious lash blasting into their flesh. Perhaps some day I will be able to pick up a violin once more. However I don't think it is likely.

For me great music will always be associated with agony, blood, degradation and death. Kommandant Wilhaus has seen to that.

My story begins on a spring morning. It starts in a pastoral setting. The sun is warm. Lazy billows of smoke rise from the chimneys of the neat little houses. Our town tries to go about its business despite the Nazi terror which surrounds us.

I have come for a short vacation from the Prague Conservatory. The holiday has been a depressing one. I note the new lines on my parents' faces. My father walks with a pronounced stoop now. His once clear eyes seem constantly filled with tears. My mother sits in her kitchen, her hands folded in her lap. She says little, does not complain. But she has a way of looking at me that shows the heartbreak she feels.

I try to be gay. Somehow I believe my moods will infect the others of my household. I point out that life under the Nazis has not been too harsh. "They have really been quite proper," I say. "In Prague their officers come to the Conservatory. They listen to our recitals and are appreciative."

I do not tell them the truth, that Prague is a city of terror. I do not tell them of my work with the underground. There is no reason to add to their terror. As I talk fear grips me. Supposing I become the instrument of betrayal of my family. Supposing Maria or Josef have been picked up for questioning. It is difficult to imagine that they will be able to hold out indefinitely before implicating the rest of us. It would be a simple matter for the Gestapo to trace me to my home.

I know I shouldn't have come back. Not even for a short visit. Yet with the ever-pungent odors of death surrounding us, one does not wait to see her relatives. Tomorrow may be too late.

I try to comfort my people as best I can. And in the evenings I run to Jan. Jan and I have been more than friends in the years since our childhood. He is strong and brave and feeling him near me gives me great courage. He has returned to our village walking stiffly. The Nazi shrapnel is still imbedded in his leg. He still wears the frayed jacket of his Czech Army uniform.

In the growing darkness of night Jan and I try to forget. I lie in his arms. My hungry lips search for his. I feel the surging strength of his arms surrounding me. His face is so close to mine that it blurs before me. I place his hand over my heart so that he can feel its wild beating. Tenderly he begins unbuttoning my blouse. My fingers close over his urging him to hurry.

In the village below we hear the sounds of a Nazi motorized patrol swinging through the streets. Our bodies strain, our limbs touch. Tenderness and fire become interwound. Our breathing grows rapid with our need. I cry out. His lips cover mine, drinking in the sound of my ecstasy. For these few moments the terror falls away from us. The evil is no longer there. It is like the times before the Nazi tanks and artillery rolled into our village.

I wish that time could be captured in this one instant. That nothing would ever change. That Jan and I would be locked forever in each other's arms.

The dream is rudely smashed for me as Jan whispers, "Come, my darling. We must hurry. It is almost curfew time."

We walk back into our village hand in hand. We pass the Nazis on the street. We walk with our eyes downcast. We seek to avoid any contact, knowing how easy it is to offend the Germans and the dangers that would entail.

I do not ask Jan about his activities nor does he mention mine. These are the times when even the most passionate of lovers do not dare to confide their innermost secrets. Knowledge can bring torture. Torture can bring betrayal and death.

Yet when the jaws of Hell open up to receive us, it is not because of any action of Jan's or mine. It comes because the Nazi Kommandant of the garrison receives a dispatch

DARLINGS, TO EVIL SONG!"

Wilhaus leers at me over the document. I hear the whip sing, then feel its fires on my back. Soon I will be shown that there are agonies other than mind-searing pain.

THE TRUTH ABOUT

APHRODISIAC

YOU GAVE her something about ten minutes ago and now she's beginning to warm up to you. You'd slipped it into her drink. A capsule. Guaranteed to work.

You'd never thought you'd score with her. Frigid type. Now you're hopeful.

She smothers you with kisses, directs your hands to parts of her body you'd figured were out of bounds.

Suddenly, she stands up. Her breathing is erratic. She stares at you as she pulls at the buttons on her blouse. One doesn't give. She rips it off. She wiggles, tugs and jerks at her clothes until they are heaped at her feet.

Naked, she drops to her knees, her face showing the torment of a burning need. She sobs, "Please... take me... before I go out of my mind!"

If a scene like that occurs, don't credit the capsule you gave her. That dose of passion food, drug, chemical, herb or spice was about as effective sexually as an aspirin.

The fact is that by giving her the aphrodisiac you actually took her life in your hands.

Couple in Greenwich Village pad (below) say love potion purchased at herb shop wakes up lagging libidos. Experts, however, say that there is only one true aphrodisiac that works.

FOODS

Here is the latest word on the age-old search for a magic potion that will turn her on.

She goes through motions of being charged up by "miraculous capsule" she swallowed. But it may be an act. Medical men warn against use of illegal potions which may cause death.

"You could have killed her, to be sure.

That's not a far-fetched claim. Doctors won't handle the stuff. There hasn't been much medical research carried out on aphrodisiacs because most physicians believe their colleagues would ridicule them for such activity.

They're probably right. But sales figures on passion food, love potions, pills, philtres, narcotics and drugs indicate that firm steps should be taken to get the stuff off the market fast. Right now the annual take is $300 million. It's expected to go higher. Millions of people are gulping aphrodisiacs in the wild hope that they will increase their sexual potency, promote longer life, give them a return to youthfulness and bless them with a good night's sleep.

Nonsense. There are passion foods that are legal, harmless and ineffective. Others are bootlegged, illegal and sometimes dangerous. If you don't know the difference, you're in trouble.

For instance, if anybody tries to sell you Mandragora your best decision is to walk away. A large dose can cause a mental breakdown or death. The potato-like plant with a root resembling the spread-eagled legs of a woman is being sold in certain sections of the United States.

Another is Cantharis Vasicatoria, better known as Spanish Fly. It's the crushed body of the cantharis beetle and is used by veterinarians as a blistering agent. Some medical men say that 24 grains can kill you. Records show, however, that some humans have died after swallowing one grain.

Medical authorities say that children, the aged and the weak, should not even use cantharides outside their bodies, and if used externally by others, utmost precaution should be taken to keep it from entering the eyes, mouth and other sensitive areas. When swallowed, Spanish Fly is especially damaging to the kidneys.

A U. S. Public Health official described the effects on a female patient who had consumed only a speck of the so-called aphrodisiac. The official said:

"She had excruciating pain in her digestive tract, stomach, kidneys and bladder. She vomited constantly and had a persistent desire to urinate. Her pulse became weaker and weaker until she finally collapsed."

An overdose of Spanish Fly is guaranteed fatal within a 24 hour period. Its dubious efficiency as a love potion lies in the fact that it irritates the urogenital tract of the male and female, but it is so powerful that even a minute dose can destroy the mucous membranes of the mouth, throat, stomach and intestines. It can cause ulcers in the bladder and erode the urethra. Using it makes you a potential murderer or a suicide.

DRUGS SUCH as morphine, cocaine, marijuana, opium, heroin, demorol, codeine and barbiturates have often been given credit for arousing passion. But what the user actually feels is

IT'S RAINING HELL'S BEACH

By Cpl. BEN VETTER

The Krauts have set the heavens
aflame and there is nothing you can do but lie
here and roast.

FIRE ON

Hell came from the heavens when fifty thousand troops landed on the beach that GI's thought of as Satan's Strip.

YOU'RE tight. Nerve ends move up to the surface of your skin and are jagged. You sit low in an LCI. Your M-1 is between your legs. You feel cold. You're surrounded by dark, shapeless forms that are men, but you are lonely. The motion of the craft sways you from one buttock to the other. It's the first time in combat for you. You wonder if the guys on both sides can feel your trembling gut. You wonder if this is the place where they will wrap you in a mattress cover and lower you into the ground...if there's enough of you to wrap up.

Darby's Rangers. That's us. Hopheads. Crazy bastards. Trained to the teeth and screaming for Kraut blood—until they stick you in an LCI and point it at a little Eyetie town and say, "Take it."

Then you're just as scared as any dogface.

Sergeant Hank Harmon is standing up. His eyes are on Yellow Beach. He says, "Where the hell's the Navy?" But to nobody in particular. He's a stretch. All arms and legs. Handles an M-1 like it's a baton. Now he glances over at the other LCIs—Task Force 81. He looks up at the stars, shakes his head.

A dark form stirs beside me. "We'll get clobbered without they send the Navy."

That's P.F.C. Walt Nunnally. Short, squat, bull-necked and bull headed. "See any of them boats, Sarge?"

Harmon doesn't answer and Walt grunts.

MONEY talks

Most cases of overcharging in retail and department stores are accidental, resulting from the fact that the employee is under pressure and becomes confused, harried, and fatigued. Some overcharges will represent deliberate cheating. The following guide from the National Cash Register Company will provide you with a guard against inaccuracies and charge-shortages: Watch the indicator window on the register where the figures pop up to make certain your sale is being properly recorded; check your receipt to make sure you've paid only for what you've purchased; always save your machine-printed receipt in case you need to return an item; if you're at a machine with an automatic change dispenser, don't forget to pick up the change coming to you; beware of transactions where the cashier has forgotten to charge you for an item and tells you he'll add it to the price without ringing it up; make sure all corrections are made only through the machine unless the store manager is present to approve; watch for "missing receipts"; if the register is not the kind which automatically calculates the amount of change due you, make sure your change is correct before you leave the counter; make sure the item you bought is tagged with its price. . . .

Here are some interesting facts about coins: the largest coin ever made weighed 47½ pounds and measured over two feet long; Queen Victoria's head has appeared on more coins than anyone else in history; the early Romans who counterfeited coins were punished by being buried alive or thrown to the lions; playing cards were once used as currency in Canada; The first Negro pictured on a U.S. coin was Booker T. Washington; the first man to be called "The Father Of His Country" wasn't George Washington, but Augustus Caesar. Caesar used this title along with his name on coins struck during his rule. . . . If you're thinking of unloading your home, don't think you can do it for free. Authorities estimate such a cost at from 10 to 15 per cent of the selling price. In other words, selling a $25,000 home on Cape Cod can set you back about $3,750. Long range planning is called for if you want to put your home on the market. If you need some repairs, it's a good idea to make them. The fixing-up may get you back $2 for every $1 you spend. You can sell your home without a lawyer, according to authorities at the Foundation for Full Service Banks, but it can be risky. An attorney can help you avoid a single legal or financial pothole. Fees for attorneys vary. Some charge a percentage of the sales price, some charge a flat fee. Others charge by the hour. Many people get into financial trouble by trying to unload a house without a real estate agent. The thought of saving the usual 6 per cent on the sale of a $25,000 home, can be tempting, but unless mortgage money is loose, an agent usually helps a buyer find mortgage money. Also, a real estate agent will help move your property faster, with fewer problems and usually at a better price. . . .

Somebody else says, "Shut up, Nun, nally."

He whirls on his butt beside me, jams his knees into my leg and says, "Blow it outa your —"

He doesn't finish because all of a sudden the sky opens up. Red streaks of fire whistle overhead in fiery arcs. Rockets. We stand up to see the fireworks. We hear the roaring hisses and see the explosions on the beaches. White stone buildings show up as the flames splash everywhere. Shock waves roll across the water. Behind us the Navy vessels are dark blobs. On both sides are other LCIs, barreling forward. Also LSTs and skinny LLS—big bugs trailing white wakes on black water.

The Navy doesn't let up. The red streaks above us are like a blazing canopy. Every square foot of Yellow, Blue and Green beaches rocks with impacts from exploding shells. All up and down the Italian coast bursts of flames light up the sky. For ten straight minutes it rains a steady stream of fire...rockets falling like cloudbursts.

I nudge Walt, "Ain't that something?"

He grunts, "Gotta take a leak." The barrage lifts. The time is 0200. H hour. The date is 22 January, 1944. Ahead of us are two small Italian resort towns.

Anzio and Nettuno.

We crawl toward the beach. Hank Harmon growls, "Lock and load."

Grinding noises under us. The craft scrapes sand. A Navy coxswain yells, "Ride's over." Steel bulkheads go down. Harmon lifts his carbine and shouts, "Hit the beach!"

The water is thigh deep. Icy. Hold your piece high and push your way forward to the beach. Itchy fingers begin firing. Harmon yells at us to cut it out. There's nothing to fire at. No Krauts. Not even any Eyetie civilians. The town's been evacuated. Duck soup.

Behind us, fifty thousand men wade ashore on a beachhead fifteen miles wide. Within hours we penetrate ten miles. The whole area is crawling with men and machines.

Then the Krauts hit us.

THEY do it with artillery from the Alban Hills ahead of us and they do it with their Luftwaffe.

At the same time we get rain—hard, driving winter rain that fills up your foxhole with two or three feet of water and keeps you in a state of misery that makes you wish you could curl up somewhere and die.

Because you can't leave that soggy foxhole. Not without risking your neck. Day and night the German planes roar over us and drop their eggs. When they are not around, the Kraut artillery is. They don't give a damn where their bombs and shells land, they're bound to hit something.

Rain turns to sleet. You're dripping wet and cold. Everything is wet and muddy to the touch. Your legs are cramped from trying to sleep without sitting down in the muck that swirls around your knees. You're feverish. The food stinks, you stink, the guys around you stink. You've got the GIs so bad you can hardly make it to the slit trench—and you know damn well that if the shelling starts while you're squatting you're going to dive right into the trench because you'll never make it back to the foxhole.

The Krauts seem to be bringing up more stuff all the time. The Luftwaffe won't quit, either. They come every day, hundreds of them laying the bombs in anywhere. Trucks get hit and lift and turn over. Ammo dumps get blown sky high and spray out showers of flaming debris. You see the bodies lying in the mud, all twisted up and bloody. You see red mixed with mud...and men dead in their foxholes, killed by concussion. The entire port area is being blown to hell.

You hunch up in your hole, day after day, taking everything the Krauts give you. You're scared. Your dirty fists are clenched most of the time because that's your automatic reaction when you hear the shells whistling. Guys scream. Sometimes near, sometimes far away. But you can hear them. Then the cry goes up—"Medic! Medic!" And you know that somewhere there's a poor bastard lying in the mud and trying to jam his legs back into bloody stumps.

You think about your misery all the time. You wonder why nobody's doing anything about the Krauts up in those hills. You're a Ranger. You weren't trained to squat in a hole and wait for an 88 to blow you to pieces. You're a fighting machine, trained for infiltration, for street fighting and for hitting the Krauts with everything you've got.

But no, you stay in your water-filled hole...leap into it when you hear shells coming...wake up in the dead of night and urinate in it and promise yourself you'll dig another tomorrow. But somehow you forget to do it...and then you're sick and you puke into the water and the hell of it is you don't care anymore. You're a pig now. You live with it, force yourself to accept it because if you don't you'll crack.

Finally, on 30 January, we get the order to move out. Just the Ranger battalions, First and Third. About 800 men. Our faces are blackened. We carry knives. Light arms. Remove as much metal as possible to hold down the noise.

It's midnight. We move forward to our outposts and disperse. In an hour the Third Division will jump off behind us. Our job is to knock out Kraut sentries and listening posts. We work in squads with one or two scouts out front. The night is black, overcast. Perfect for the kind of killing we have to do.

I'm with Sergeant Hank Harmon and Walt Nunnally. To my right is Mike Speranza, a muscle-bound nut who says his ancestors once lived in Cisterna, the town that's our objective. Ahead is Bernie Meyerson, scouting.

WE stay low to prevent silhouetting ourselves. The stretch of open land is as black as the sky. Bernie's crawling. We catch up to him and ease down into the mud. He points straight ahead and holds up two fingers. We flank the two Krauts, Walt and I to the right, Hank and Bernie to the left. On our hands and knees to make less noise than boots. Our knives ready.

I'm shivering. Partly from cold, partly from fear. This is my first kill. I find myself hoping that Hank and Bernie will get the job done. But it doesn't work out that way because I'm with Walt.

You've got to know guys like Walt and the others to understand why they volunteer for the Rangers. You've got to see the killer look in their eyes. After awhile you savvy their thinking—and you know that war is made for them, and for you, too, because you're here with them and searching for the excitement of danger and death. So you crawl towards the unsuspecting Krauts, feeling all keyed up, tense, alert, gripping the knife like your hand was made for no other purpose.

Walt is beside me in the mud. We inch forward on our guts. The smell of the mud is right under our noses. We're sodden and slimy, crawling like snakes.

He jabs me. The signal. We rise up and lunge. I can see a square face. I can hear a noise in the Kraut's throat. My blade sinks deep into his neck. His mouth is open. He struggles under me. My steel comes out bloody and I plunge it in again, this time under his heavy chin...deep, so that the tip scrapes bone. Blood bubbles up in his mouth and I feel him go limp.

It's all over. My first kill is behind me now. I'm like the other Rangers.

A butcher.

Walt lifts himself off his Kraut and wipes the blade on the gray-green overcoat. Hank and Bernie join us and we move deeper into enemy territory. At the first built-up road we come to, the 3rd Battalion regroup for further orders. We have penetrated the outer perimeter of the Kraut lines; now we'll push on to Cisterna.

It's dawn, gray and bleak. Company A will hit the town on the right flank, Company B on the left. Company C will hang back, mop up and be ready to jump in where needed. D Company is being split up, its heavy weapons distributed as evenly as possible. Hank Harmon leads our squad down the road. We spread out. Hank carries a Thompson submachine gun now. His M-1 is slung across his back and he hopes along, chomping on tobacco.

An old Italian man hobbles towards us. He points up the road. "Tedeschi!" Mike Speranza talks to him in his native language. A platoon of Krauts is bivouacked in the woods about a half mile further. They are still asleep.

Hank spits a glob of brown juice into the mud. "Let's go get 'em."

THE slaughter starts with a sentry snapping, "Wer da?" He sees who goes there and starts to run. Hank throws a short burst. The Kraut is slammed sideways, screaming.

We race into the bivouac area, howling like wild animals, our bullets killing men before they get out of their blankets. Our bayonets slash them mercilessly. Hank barrels forward, his Tommy gun pointed down at the ground. Every short burst means a quick death and he cuts his way through the stunned Krauts, blowing their heads off or splattering their guts. The screaming that fills the woods is ear-splitting. Germans are trying to run away, but are chopped down. One smashes into Walt by accident. They struggle for Walt's rifle. The Kraut is gasping, fighting for his life by hanging onto the stock. I can see his wide eyes staring right at me as I plunge my bayonet into his side. He sinks. His fingers ease off Walt's rifle. He dies on his knees.

We get back to the road. Hank reassembles his squad, looks for casualties. Nobody is hurt. We walk again, following the lanky, loping figure out front.

We're on a kill spree. We're Rangers. Tough. Nobody can stop us. You get that feeling and it's dangerous. But you can't help it. You're swept up in this thing and you become cocky. You don't think about the men you kill. You forget their screams and the way they look at you when your cold steel sinks into their bellies. You have to forget because you have a hunch that if you don't you'll go ape.

JOIN MARCH

Walt Nunnally is behind me on the road. We are approaching open fields and can see no adequate cover. It's daylight now. Walt is laughing about something. Since he does laugh occasionally and for no apparent reason, we pay him no mind. He drives a beer truck in Rome, New York. He swaggers when he walks and has the kind of sneer you'd like to smash. There's nothing likeable about the guy, but he's the best damn in-fighter in the 3rd Rangers.

"You see them Krauts' faces, Ben? I coulda died laughing."

"Shut up, Walt."

"What the hell for?" I hear him kick the mud in anger. He mumbles something under his breath. For a few yards he's quiet, but I can hear him fuming. He was at Salerno, has plenty of battle experience under his belt. But he's got one stripe to my two. And he can't live with it.

We're in the soggy fields. A few hundred yards ahead are the stone houses of Cisterna. Quiet. Empty. Mike Speranza grunts, "What a dump." We spread out, ten yards apart. Can't see any signs of life, not even the Eyeties.

The unmistakable rip of a Schmeisser MP 38 cuts across in front of us. A 20-mm flak wagon chews up dirt. Mortars crump. The field catches fire, or seems to, with the explosions that flare redly and spew fragments. We're caught in the open. We hit the wet ground and fumble with our entrenching tools. First a shallow trench to lie in and fight back. Then if we have time, a full foxhole. But there is no time. We can only hug the muck and shoot. Our mortars answer the Krauts' and our .50 calibres lay in a hot fan of tracers that ping and twang off the stone houses. But there's no doubt about the superiority of enemy fire power. They've got machine guns everywhere. They've got tanks rumbling somewhere nearby and enough mortars to plow the field we're in.

Off to our left I see five Rangers charge a machine gun nest in a barn. The men are cut down. Another four race for the nest and they too are sliced to pieces. But then a grenade pops up from the ground. It explodes in front of the structure. Pieces of men and metal sail out and when the smoke clears there's nothing left but the wide barn doors swinging on half smashed hinges.

The Third Division is an hour behind us, but as the morning passes we know something has happened. They must be in the same kind of trouble somewhere.

By noon we know the score. We're trapped here outside Cisterna. We're not going to get help from anybody. We can use artillery, infantry and armored vehicles, but we're not going to get them. We've maneuvered ourselves into a hot spot and if we can't fight our way out of it we're dead.

German artillery fire is stepped up. Their MG 42s chatter endlessly. Tracers whip above our heads. The ground trembles with the impact of 88 and mortar shells. To our right we can see two SP guns with the 77-mm snouts firing point-blank at Rangers huddled in an irrigation ditch. Black smoke rises out of the depression. We hear screaming. Some of the Rangers are crawling out in a mad scramble to escape. The others are holding their ground. A bazooka shell blasts into one of the SPs and leaves it smoking. The same bazooka cripples the other self-propelled gun.

But the fight there is not over. A third SP rolls up to the ditch. The long-snouted gun is depressed and ready to blast away. At that same instant a Ranger slips out of the ditch, crawls under the armored vehicle and slaps a gummy AT grenade to its belly. He takes off fast, does a flip into the trench just as the SP gun blows up.

Then Sergeant Hank Harmon gets it. Mortar shards tear him apart. By the time Walt and I get to him he's face down in his shallow trench, his head bobbing in the water at the bottom.

Walt and I look at each other. The sneer grates me. Even now he wears it. And I know what's behind it. I'm squad leader now. Buck Sergeant. I'll get the extra stripe when and if we come out of this thing alive.

Walt thinks he should have it.

His cracked lips spread wide in a humorless grin. "Didn't have to brown nose for this one, huh?"

"You son of a —"

A mortar shell explodes close. We flatten out. Another slams in and we race for our own trenches. The Krauts are confident. They are beginning to show themselves in the town. I see the black uniforms of the SS, and the Mark IV Panthers that are grinding out from behind the houses. We're finished now. It's only a matter of time.

Bernie Meyerson's throat is ripped open by a machine gun slug. He straightens up in his trench, gagging, his hands clutching at the torn flesh.

He thrashes about, his hands turning red, his eyes wild. Then he slumps back. His fingers snap open. He shudders violently...and dies.

Next one to go is Mike Speranza. An 88 shell, direct hit. He dies without knowing how. This is where his ancestors lived. And he came three thousand miles to add his dust to theirs.

The squad is depleting fast. The same thing is happening to the whole battalion. We're getting chopped to pieces. We're too deep into the field to risk racing back and it's obvious the only thing left for us to do is to charge forward and try somehow to reach the town and use the buildings as shields.

MAJOR Barrow has already thought of it. He's standing up, maybe a hundred yards from us. He's waving his arms at us. "Let's go!" He yells it over and over and you can see the men rising up out of their holes because they know they can't survive for very long where we are now.

The squad leaders and platoon leaders move forward, urging their men to follow them. For a moment I forget that I'm supposed to do the same with my squad. I get a sharp reminder from Nunnally. "Hey, you gonna sit this one out?"

He's already on his feet. I jump up, snarling at him and wave my arm at the others.

We're running. I have Hank's Tommy gun and I'm spraying the area dead ahead of me. A 2.36 bazooka sets a Panther on fire, but then a Tiger comes roaring up in front of us and the bazooka can't penetrate the armor.

Machine gun bullets spit out of the pistol port on the tank's turret. We dive fast. We grovel in the sopping wet ground. But not Walt. I spot him scrambling around to the rear sponson. He's on top. A grenade is clutched in his hand. The tank commander jerks on the hatch cover. He's not quick enough. The grenade sails in. Seconds later we hear the muffled explosion and the screams from the men inside.

Walt leaps down and rolls behind a tread for safety. He looks back at us—at me—and sneers. I can't stand his guts but the son of a bitch sure can fight.

A few Tigers are knocked out the same way. We manage to score some hits on machine gun nests, but our attack is broken up. The fire power coming from Cisterna is too much for us. We're reduced to small pockets of resistance. Our ammo is low. For some, it's gone. We pick up Kraut rifles and use them until they're empty. We huddle in the ditches and shell holes that were full of water. We fight with what we've got, but it's not enough. We can't stop the tanks anymore. We can't stop the SS, the Panzer Grenadiers and the paratroopers who are swarming towards us.

The Mark Vis lumber and clank and depress their big 88s into the holes and blast the Rangers out of them.

The SS advance and shoot or bayonet our wounded.

Walt Nunnally see two of the black-uniformed Krauts jabbing our guys and goes ape. He jumps up. All that's left for him to fight with is a knife. His attack is so swift that the SS men don't have time to lift their rifles.

He slams into one and drives the blade into the Kraut's chest. In his insane desire to make sure the guy is dead, he plunges the blade in again and again, forgetting or blindly ignoring the other. I scream at him to watch out, but too late. A bayonet is driven through his neck...his thick bull neck that supported that cocky head of his.

"Raus!"

I'm marched into Cisterna. I look back at the field, dotted now with dead Rangers. Two battalions of them. Plenty of Krauts out there, too.

They beat the hell out of us. They clobbered Darby's Rangers for all time.

But they sure as hell knew they were in a fight. END

THE VAMPIRES

before her captors. In mute panic she felt Ilona Joo arranging her ankles so that the delicate bones touched. Then the coldness of the leg irons snapped shut, totally immobilizing her.

"Is this one not a prize, your highness?"

The rheumy voice of Ilona Joo cackled with an obscene delight as her taloned fingers tested the firmness of Constance Imry's nearly naked breasts. "Will she not bring m'lady an ecstasy of delight?"

Constance Imry raised her tear-stained face to see Elisabeth moving towards her. The mad countess extended her goblet to Thoriko. Her mouth bore the imprint of her fearful beverage.

Elisabeth, the Countess Bathory clapped her hands together in girlish delight as her companions brutally stripped what remained of Constance Imry's clothing from her.

Her hands were as icy as the grave now as she stood over her captive and ran them across the girl's nakedness. Constance Imry's plump breasts and full buttocks held some evil fascination for the mistress of Castle Csejte. Elisabeth's hand, soft and smooth, reached for Constance Imry's chin, drawing her head back. She examined the fettered girl the way one does a prize head of cattle.

"In time this one will provide us sustenance, dear nurse," Elisabeth purred. "But first let her provide us entertainment." Then she turned to the hulking, pock-marked gargoyle named Thoriko. "And what have you and Ujvary planned for her?"

Thoriko grunted in response. He dragged Constance Imry to her feet and did an unmentionable thing to her body. "The lash, m'lady. This one will dance a merry tune to the crack of the whip."

"Good, my devoted, Thoriko. But later. First let her feast on some of the other delicacies our hospitality provides."

"No!" Constance Imry shrieked. "In the name of all that is holy, do not use me thus. I am but a poor gypsy maid. I have done you no harm. I bear you no malice. Why use me so?"

"Hush, my little pigeon!" Ilona Joo giggled. "Save your strength. You will need every bit of it 'ere the life's blood has been let from your veins."

Thoriko hoisted Constance Imry to his shoulder. The softness of her nubile body was bathed in the sweat of fear. Once again the palms of his horny hands were doing terrible things to her.

WADDLING FROM side to side, his grossness resembling that of a shambling beast he carried the fettered girl to an ante chamber where Ujvary waited in his leather jerkin and black slitted mask midst the terrible engines of his trade.

"The girl is cold!" Thoriko gloated. Make sure she is warmed a bit." Ilona Joo's cackle and the low, musical laugh of the castle's mistress echoed Thoriko's words.

The diabolical purpose of the chair became apparent to the screaming girl a moment later when Ujvary slid a pan of glowing coals into a rack directly under the seat.

The iron chair heated slowly. At first the sense of warmth came as a welcome respite from the darkness of the torture chamber. But the comfort was short lived. Heat swirled up around Constance Imry's body. She strained upwards. The iron bands holding her in place added new pain as they ground against her struggling flesh.

Constance Imry's voice was raised in a constant shriek. She threw her head from side to side. The agony was a cumulative thing, building to a crescendo and then mounting from there. Everything in the hell chamber was obliterated from her view except for the visages of her maniacal tormentors.

Elisabeth Bathory's face moved toward her. The beautiful countess stared at her victim with unblinking eyes. Her mouth slacked open. The cords in her neck stood out. Her breasts quivered their excitement. She rubbed her own flanks. The dried blood on her lips was an obscene gash.

"So sweet. So plump. So healthy!" she murmured as she stroked Constance Imry's nakedness. "What a wonderful little one you are for us."

Her laugh rose to a pitch even above the shriek of her tortured handmaiden.

THUS WAS THE village beauty Constance Imry introduced to Satan's nest. Historians are not definite about how she got there. All they know is that she was one of hundreds of Transylvanian girls who disappeared across the evil castle's yawning moat. And once the gates and draw bridge loomed behind them, their destiny was sealed.

Csejte. The name of the castle has become synonymous with all that is evil in the hearts of man. For here in the menage of the beautiful Elisabeth Bathory was practiced every abomination which the malignant brain is capable of conjuring.

One might have expected the high born, tempestuous heiress to the Bathory title and lands would revel in the more exotic forms of sexual gratification. Her family's history was one of wildness and rapine lust. So well placed were they that even the King of Hungary thought twice before incurring their wrath.

To understand this, you must remember that in the 16th Century no European crowned head could rest easy. A king was no stronger than the fealty of his noble Barons. To them went the task of collecting his taxes, raising his armies and fighting his battles. And whatever might be said against the Bathorys, nobody had ever bemoaned their bravery in battle nor their ability to rule their fiefs with an iron hand.

Spoiled, arrogant, indescribably beautiful, Elisabeth became almost universally sought after. Count Ferencz Nadassy gained the inside track with her because of his reputation for being a boudoir bull.

Elisabeth had ample opportunity to test his sexual prowess before she became the mistress of his castle. Under his guidance the young countess was introduced to every form of exotic love making that man and woman can enter into.

For his part, Ferencz was more than satisfied. He told intimates, "She is tireless. There is no such thing as too much for her. Nor can one shock her. No matter what I suggest, she complies. And some of our best improvisations have been her idea."

Within months the newlyweds had showed off for Csejte. As part of her dowry, Elisabeth brought Ilona Joo who had nursed her from childhood. The ancient crone had filled Elisabeth's head with wild tales of love potions, compacts with Satan and the other devious workings of the occult. Now to maintain her position as the Countess's trusted confidant and to head off any possible competition from Ferencz Nadassy's household retinue, Ilona Joo delved ever deeper into the murky slime of abnormality. It was she who hired the torturers Thoriko and Ujvary. They'd been nothing more but village rapists before Elisabeth's arrival on the scene. Now they were given an opportunity to refine their sadism into a fine art.

Had Ferencz been a home-loving husband perhaps none of the horror which was to mark Csejte as a place of evil would have occurred. However like any other red-blooded Transylvanian of royal birth he constantly sought new villages to sack, new virgins to rape.

This left Elisabeth to wander around the cavernous halls of Nadasdy's castle in a state of growing boredom. She became fretful—even raging at her beloved nurse from time to time.

It was at this point that Ilona Joo introduced Elisabeth to lesbianism in the form of the beautiful and insatiably cruel Dorotya. The woman had been Ferenc's mistress before Elisabeth appeared on the scene.

Whatever anguish Dorotya may have felt at losing Nadasdy, she was quick to bounce back. If she couldn't have the count, she'd take his countess.

SOON Elisabeth's bed chamber echoed to her wild cries of passion and Dorotya's answering grunts. The ex-mistress knew how to bring the countess to a fever of passion which was several decibels higher than she attained even with Nadasdy.

However Dorotya's chief area of interest remained the subterranean torture chambers which were part of the hardware of any well equipped castle of the time. Nightly she prowled the depressing area, her nostrils quivering at the stench of human debasement, her eyes lighting at the sight of the grisly devices.

At first she found it difficult to interest Elisabeth in the macabre setting. Then she seized upon the opportunity afforded by a nubile serving girl spilling hot soup on the countess's hand to make her point.

The terrified girl was dragged, kicking, squirming and shrieking to the dungeon. Overcome by rage and pain, Elisabeth consented to view the girl's chastisement.

She watched as the girl was strung up by her thumbs and literally cut to ribbons by a vicious whipping. As the pool of blood grew at the girl's feet, Dorotya gracefully bent down and dipped her handkerchief into the gore and offered it to Elisabeth. Elisabeth rubbed the blood over the small scald mark on her own hand.

When the whipping had been completed, Ilona Joo who had joined the group, ordered the girl lowered into a roaring fire. Elisabeth and Dorotya conducted their love-making accompanied by the mortal shrieks of the tortured girl.

Several days later Elisabeth is said to have noticed that the skin of her hand where she had applied the handkerchief was even whiter and smoother than it had been before her injury.

And this discovery was to turn Csejte into a chanel house without rival.

"Blood!" Elisabeth cried to Ilona Joo. "I must have blood!"

"And so you shall," the old crone intoned.

Thus began the disappearance of hundreds of maidens. Sometimes they would be interviewed in the village for positions as castle scullery maids, Ilona Joo would arrange to have them drugged and carried off. Sometimes Thoriko or Ujvary would fall upon them as they worked in the fields. A filthy rag would be shoved into their mouths to still their outcries. Their limbs would be bound with heavy ropes and they would be taken to the castle.

Immediately upon their arrival they would be conducted to the underground dungeon, stripped of their clothing and their nude bodies chained to the wall.

Then Elisabeth would conduct her inspection. The more robust of the village maids would be consigned to the "blood farm." They would be forced to eat huge portions of raw meat. If they refused, they would be placed on the rack and stretched until the torture of their over-extended points would destroy all will to fight.

When they were "ripe" they would be hung upside down by their heels. Huge casks would be placed beneath them. Their major arteries would be cut open and the life's blood would splash down into the waiting receptacle.

MADDENED by her orgiastic life, Elisabeth took to bathing in maidens' blood. She convinced herself that such beauty treatments would not only bring her immortality, but eternal youth and beauty. Ilona Joo remained close beside her mistress, her phlegm flecked spittle gushing as she made promises spawned in hell. Dorotya too continued in the household, her sadistic pleasures becoming ever more excessive.

The terrorized Transylvanian serfs considered attacking the bastion of wickedness. But they were numbed by thoughts of the retribution which would be brought down upon their heads if such an attack failed.

Word of the debaucheries at Csejte was received by the royal court. But no immediate action was taken. Ferenc Nadasdy was not a man to be trifled with. Any investigation of his wife might boomerang.

For a time it appeared as if Elisabeth's dream of immortality through vampirism would come true. But immortality was not to come to Ferenc. The count was killed in a minor skirmish. At last the protection of the House of Nadasdy was denied to his bereaved widow.

Now the king of Hungary, fearing a peasant revolt, acted. He sent a royal commission to investigate the goings on.

So horrified were the men who entered the dungeons that they could not contain their wrath at what they saw.

An immediate trial was held.

Ilona Joo—to have her fingers removed one by one, her ancient intestines ripped from her living body and placed across her emaciated breasts while she was roasted over a slow fire.

Thoriko and Ujvary—to have their sex organs ripped from their groins and placed in their mouths. To be scourged with barbed whips. To be drawn and quartered and finally burned alive.

Dorotya—to be raped by a tame bear. Then to be stretched on a rack while her breasts were amputated by means of red-hot pincers. And finally to be consigned to the flames.

And for Elisabeth Bathory whose family connections were still mighty—to be walled up in the castle. To have no contact with another human being. There to live out her normal life span in the hopes that she would repent before her death.

Whether she did or not—or indeed was capable of such penance will never be known. Suffice it to say that she remains until this day the hideous image of evil incarnate.

EVIL SONG

from Berlin that the Hangman has died. His evil blood has congealed around the wounds caused by a Czech held pistol and Heydrich is now a petrifying corpse.

We don't know yet that a special order has come from Himmler himself. We are to learn of it in a matter of hours as the tanks and the lorries roll through our village and steel helmeted Nazis pound at our doors with their rifle butts.

We are to be herded into little groups in the village square.

Men and boys to the left. Women and children to the right. Machen schnell! Achtung! Raus! Raus! Men and boys, place your hands behind your necks. Forward. Run. Run. Run. Come on you Schweinhunds. Shake your rumps.

THINGS are happening so quickly that we don't comprehend the developments completely. I stand in the square, my hands raised. I see Jan trying to keep up with the rest on his shrapnel damaged leg. I see the Nazi guards beating him with the butts of their rifles. He staggers and falls under the rain of blows. Blood gushes from his nose and mouth. Somehow he picks himself up and manages to join the others.

I see my father moving with the group. His back is straight. His head is held high. Once he looks over his shoulder. Our eyes meet. A faint flicker of a smile touches his lips. He disappears around the corner.

The sounds of machine gun fire erupt. I can feel the snub nosed slugs slamming into my own back. One beautiful girl cries out and sinks to her knees mindless of the fact that her light dress is becoming besmirched with horse manure. One of the other women reaches down and lifts her back to her feet. The woman places a protective arm around the girl's shoulder. The girl sobs convulsively. Yet she makes no sound.

The acrid stench of smoke billows around us. Flames vomit up from the roof tops of our houses.

Move you sows! Move on out! There is no more Lidice. Now you will learn what it means to kill a brave officer of the Reich!

The days that follow are a red blur to me. I stagger along dusty roads for hours on end. Always there are rifle butts to slam into our flesh if we begin to lag. We can no longer talk. It is all we can do to maintain our strength, to keep our tortured legs operating.

Then there is a stinking freight car. We are jammed so tightly into the car that we can scarcely breathe. Children are tossed in on top of us. For three days we are locked in the car without food, without sanitary facilities.

At last the car doors are unbolted. Truncheon swinging guards in black uniforms come aboard. They let fly with the rubber batons, driving us like so many heads of cattle before them. I have arrived at the Treblinka Concentration Camp.

Processing is a horror in itself. Before our cruel-faced guards we are forced to strip off all our clothing and made to run a gauntlet to the shower house. The Nazis shout obscenities at us, obscenities that no woman should ever hear.

There is a hidden evil in the naked parade. One Nazi stands with his hand to his chin, studying us. He holds a riding crop with which he gestures. It suddenly dawns on me that there is a pattern to his gestures. The older women of Lidice, the frailer ones, the ones who can not keep up with the rest of us, are ordered to form a group on the right. The younger ones, the ones whose bodies have yet to face the ravages of time are ordered to the left. I see my own mother being herded in with the first group. I try to bolt to her. A Nazi truncheon slams into the small of my back. I double up with pain.

"Your time will come soon enough, schatzi. Do not hurry it!" The Nazi truncheon wielder hisses into my ear.

Still naked after our showers we are taken before a German who sits at a big table. He asks questions and scribbles on small index cards. I give him my name, my age, my occupation. When he hears that I have been studying the violin at the Prague Conservatory the Nazi looks up. He studies my nakedness for a long minute. What passes for a smile touches his thin bloodless lips. "Kommandant Wilhaus will be interested in you," he says.

I am told to remain after the others have been marched down the road. A kapo takes me in tow. I am surprised to find that I am given a complete issue of clothes, silk underwear, a neat dress, a linen headpiece. I am taken to a special barracks where other young and beautiful girls sit on their cots staring off into space. Nobody talks to me. Each girl is lost in her own thoughts.

THIS is my introduction to Treblinka's all female Orchestra of Death. Within hours I am swept up into the routine of the group. The horror of it all comes to me that evening when we are marched out to the clearing for punishment hour. We stand under a raised platform. I hold the violin which has been issued to me in shaking fingers. In the past days I have seen such horror that my mind is dulled by it. Yet I have not been prepared for the sickening terror which is to come.

Our leader taps her baton on the podium. We raise our instruments and begin a spritely march. A scene straight out of the bowels of hell begins to unfold. Through the company ranks comes a parade so diabolical that it is difficult to describe. Eight young women goosestep through their cordon of guards. Their trim thighs are rose in the dying rays of the sun. Their bodies glisten with perspiration. Their eyes are fixed on the heavy legged stools which have been bolted to the scaffold. The girls mount the steps and stand before the stools. At a signal they bend down and clutch the stool legs with their hands.

Quickly the hard-faced guards move in. They strap the girls' wrists and ankles to the stool legs. One of the girls tugs at her bindings. She cannot move. I see the Nazi officer step forward. He carries a heavy black whip. He uncoils it and runs the lash through his fingers.

There is the sharp retort of a pistol shot. A girl writhes and shrieks. Her hands clench and unclench. From where I stand, I can see her toes curling. A trickle of blood runs across her back and down her thigh. The stool creaks with her efforts. I taste bile rising in my throat. The orchestra leader stares at me. I understand her message. I bend to my violin and play frantically.

THE whippings are only the beginning of the punishment. Three of the tortured girls are ordered to remain on the platform. Their arms are bound behind their backs.

Heavy ropes are tied around their thighs and ankles.

My head swims giddily as the noses are dropped over their heads. These poor souls are not even to be given the mercy of a quick hanging. Instead of being dropped through a trap door, they are drawn upwards to the gibbet. The strangling gurgles, erupt from their throats. Bloody foam gushes from their noses. Their convulsing limbs dance on the fetid air. They do not die in seconds. Long minutes go by. They are still twitching, shrieking and moaning. The sounds of our music blend with their song of agony. I grow faint. I know that I dare not give way.

That evening I am ordered to his quarters. Wilhaus has been drinking heavily. There are other officers with him. Another girl has been brought in. I do not know the purpose of our being here.

Wilhaus begins pawing me in ways which I cannot describe. He is an animal who merely walks on two legs like a man.

The Nazis continue their drinking. Suddenly they fall upon me with a violence which crushes me to the floor. I feel the strain on my shoulders as my arms are wrenched behind me. My wrists are chafed by the leather thongs which are bound around them. I am completely helpless.

I lie on the floor staring up at Wilhaus. He places a record on his gramophone. He smirks down at me.

The first strains of Bruckner's Fifth Symphony flood through the room. The record is scratchy. It has been worn thin by constant playing.

I feel myself being hoisted to my feet. Sudden mind-searing pain shots through my shoulders. The outraged tendons are now bearing my full weight. Nausea grips me. I swing in a tight circle above the leering faces of the Nazis. They tug at my clothing. I bite my lip. I try to keep from screaming.

As I hang there, the second girl has her arms hitched above her head. Her dress is ripped down the back. Her skin is taut. She wriggles helplessly as she stares at the whip in the Kommandant's hand.

Blackness surrounds me. I vaguely hear the sounds of her whipping. Wilhaus's voice comes to me from far away. I hear him giggle.

I am not aware of being cut down. I come to with blazing lights shining in my eyes. I have been placed on a bed. The sheets are cool against my fevered body. Only Wilhaus is in the room now. What has gone before is only a prelude for the true horror I am about to suffer.

IN the morning I am ordered to return to the orchestra. For eighteen hours a day we either practice or play. Even though I am forced to spend many nights with Wilhaus, this does not serve as an excuse for my duties with the orchestra.

In Treblinka even being a member of the musical group becomes an instrument of torture. The girls who play the wind instruments are the most vulnerable. They develop tuberculosis because of the outrageous strain on their lungs. When they can no longer perform their orchestra duties, they are marched off to the gas chambers.

There is no sense of comradeship among the women. We have been so brutalized by our treatment that we find ourselves reduced almost to the stage of jungle beasts. Perhaps this is the ultimate of the horrors we suffer.

Suddenly the camp rumor mills begin to grind. New Russian prisoners are coming into the compound. They report they were seized close to the Don. This means that the Nazis are falling back. Perhaps after all we will survive this terrible ordeal. Help may still come in time.

Word goes out that the camp is to be abandoned. The orchestra has been placed on the list of those to be liquidated. We have seen too much. We would be damning witnesses against the Nazis.

I have become friendly with a Polish woman physician who has worked in the camp hospital. She hears of my danger and comes to me in the night.

"There may be a way," she tells me. "The Nazis will not come into the communicable disease wards. They are too cowardly for that."

I listen to her words. "There will be danger," she says. "I will have to shoot you full of typhus. Then we can give you the bed of a prisoner who has died. A certain amount of record switching and if we are lucky you will have gone underground."

The confusion gripping the camp plays into our hands. I am able to submerge. For days I burn up with fever. From time to time in my delirium I dream I am back in Lidice with Jan and my parents. These dreams are smashed by the blasting strains of the Bruckner Symphony and the visions of women strung up by their hands and slowly whipped to death.

There is a day when there is much shouting and the sound of rifle fire. Russian soldiers race through the encampment. They look at me and call me Little Sister. The war has ended for us.

It takes years for me to regain the threads of my shattered life. I have no home, no family, no lover. I cannot return to Czechoslovakia. The memories there are too bitter. Somehow I make it to the west. I am one of the broken ones shuffling along the bomb pocked roads, searching and not knowing what I am searching for.

Yet the human instinct to survive, to be more than the animals of the jungle is so strong that I gradually come all the way back. I meet Stanislaus Kaslovski, a displaced person from Poland. He is a good man, a tragic man, a man who has lost all—his wife, his totling children, his home.

My love for him is not the same as my love for Jan had been. Nor can I ever replace his martyred wife in his affections. But we do make a life together. We come to know tenderness and hope in each other's arms. We learn that life is for the living. In time we have our own little boy and girl. We hope that we can leave them a better world than the one we found.

DOOM YOUR SEX LIFE

that these couples remained together because of a strong mutual need.

2. Fear. One of the prime causes of premature ejaculation or failure to maintain an erection, according to most psychiatrists is the fear of sexual failure. From infancy a man lives in terror of not being able to perform the sex act. If he believes he does not measure up to what is expected of him, his nervous tension becomes acute. He becomes involved in the vicious cycle of fear of failure and resulting failure.

Perhaps more middle aged men go haywire because of fear than for any other reason. They are at first amused and then appalled by their growing paunch, their increasing breathlessness, the receding hair line, the gray at their temples. The coming of age to them represents the coming of barrenness and ultimate death.

Rather than blame themselves for the toll of time or accept it philosophically, they begin to see failings in their wives. Now begins the search for the younger woman who can inject them with an elixir of youth. Sadly and usually too late, they learn the basic fact that when a man says age doesn't matter, he cannot bring up one example where a young girl ever fell in love with a poor old man.

3. Avarice. In our society a man's worth is judged by the car he drives, the clothes his wife wears, the size of his outstanding mortgage. Hocked up to the eyeballs to show that he is as good as the next man, he finds himself devoting all of his energies to chasing the golden carrot. He becomes both physically and emotionally so exhausted that he no longer tries to satisfy the needs of his wife.

Just how bad off is he in our affluent society? A recent survey by savings banks showed that the average American family stood only 30 days away from total bankruptcy. Yet Mrs. America will not change his ways. He'll nurse his ulcers, court his coronary and drive his wife into another man's arms because unless there are two cars on his car port, he'll be judged a failure as a human being.

4. Competitiveness. Life by the numbers has done strange things to men. With the greater freedom in discussing sex, they now hear stories of the proper frequency of marital relations. They compare themselves to what they hear. Never thinking that the man who brags about his sex life is the one who has much inadequacy to hide, many a man makes a contest out of his relations with his wife. Has he made love once this week? Then he's a weakling. Has he made it twice? He still has far to go. Has he worn himself out with seven separate experiences on seven separate nights? Eureka, Superman!

But there was no tenderness, no real meaning. He might just as well taken himself to a gymnasium to see how many handstands he could accomplish.

5. Irresponsibility. Many men have lost sight of the reason nature has given them their sexual powers. They refuse to accept the responsibility intended. They do not measure up as fathers. They do not want to be the heads of their household. They would rather slink off to the golf course, the bowling alley, the other woman.

To be able to sire children is one thing. To be a husband and a father is quite another. Too many men, especially those who marry in their teen years and early twenties find this out to their dismay. According to a clergyman who recently appeared on WCBS (Columbia Broadcasting System's New York station) sex is often given as the reason for smashups of teenage marriages. However he contends the underlying cause is immaturity which effects the couple's sex life as well as their approach to all their other problems. Immaturity and irresponsibility are one and the same thing.

6. Selfishness. Nothing can be more devastating to a long range sexual union than a man's selfishness.

Recently a young wife who had a history of habitual abortions became pregnant. Among the instructions given her by her obstetrician was this—"And no marital relations for the first three months—if you can avoid them."

The woman was amazed at the last part. "I won't have any trouble. My husband understands the situation," she assured the physician. Then she asked, "Do you mean to tell me there are men who wouldn't?"

The doctor sighed heavily. "I've been in practice over 40 years," he answered. "In that time I have told many a man about the dangers to his wife if he insisted on claiming his prerogative while she was undergoing an illness or a difficult pregnancy. I can't tell you how many disregarded my advice completely. I know that their wives could never respect them again after that. But it didn't matter to them. They went on demanding."

If a man will disregard his wife's health, he will have no regard for lesser discomforts. He may attain gratification with an unwilling and captive partner, but he will never know love.

7. Gluttony. Surprisingly a man's eating habits are in the main emotionally induced. They will become an important factor in his sex life. The glutton who devours far more than he needs to is trying to limit his sexual encounters. Dr. Rose Franzblau, the noted family relations expert notes that many people who eat to excess are trying to withdraw from contacts with the opposite sex. They fear rejection of themselves as people, so they make their bodies grotesque in an attempt to take themselves out of sexual contention.

8. Alcoholism. As a social, economic and sexual stresses grow in the United States, there is a growing trend to temperate drinking on the part of the American male. Although many problem drinkers would be irate to be considered "rum-dums" they are drinking to the point where they cannot maintain their sexual potential.

There are misconceptions about the role of alcohol in sex. Many people consider it a prerequisite for seduction. It loosens inhibitions. It makes men less inhibited and women more responsive.

This may be true in that liquor dulls the conscious workings of the brain. However it acts as a depressant on the entire nervous system.

9. Prudishness. Out of our Victorian heritage has come a sick emotion which equates sex with filth. A man may desire sex instinctively and at the same time be repelled by it consciously.

Dr. Kinsey's studies illustrated this point by showing that the less educated people were, the more they were chained by false notions of morality. For example in the lowest educational brackets the majority of men believed it was indecent to kiss or fondle their wives as a means of preparing them for coitus. They also contended it was immoral for either husband or wife to appear before the other naked. Such restrictive attitudes can only lead to sexual maladjustment on the part of husband and wife.

Dr. Rebecca Liswood, in her book, A Marriage Doctor Speaks Her Mind About Sex, says, "There is absolutely nothing that you can do with each other in sexual experimentation that is in any way wrong or perverted or something you shouldn't be doing as long as you both enjoy the love-making."

10. Slovenliness. Lack of proper hygiene is used by many men to prove their masculinity. Good grooming and proper sanitation do not prove a man a sissy.

Having read the ten points which spell sexual weakness and tend to doom your sex life, you see how easy it is to correct them. It certainly is worth the effort. It can mean a future of love and happiness.

ORGY GIRL

You'll pardon me if I choke on that one. There are a few tycoons who are broad-shouldered, slender waisted, clear eyed and resemble Mark Trail, the outdoors man. But most of them run to flab. Their bellies bulge over their slacks. The second and third chins almost cover their throats. The little arteries are beginning to stand blue against their temples.

LOOK at a group of them and you'll see more than one coronary in the offing. But you'd never know it the way they pant and wheeze after you. And if you've ever had your bottom pinched by one, you know he's not suffering from paralysis of the will or the id.

Usually the first few hours of an orgy, even afloat, are given over to what orgies used to be for. That is drinking. When I say the liquor flows like water, that's the understatement of the year. It's all good stuff too. There's no Cheyenne fire water here.

Only the host seems to be pacing himself? Why not? He's not here to have fun. His will come later in the big contract or the favorable ruling on a pet project. He circulates. He slobbers over the girls. He doesn't do it to enjoy himself, but to create a climate. His guests must know that the staff members of the party are shock-proof. And brother are we...

Soon everybody takes the cue. The stories get dirty. The bottoms get pinched harder. A hand reaches down the front of a dress. A dirty joke becomes a dirty dirty. We're off and running. Things begin to happen all around you.

Kitty squeals and laughs. Toni goes into her belly dance routine. Clothes start flying. So far it's just boy and girl exuberance. But there's more to come—much more!

Now the pairing off gets underway. No smart promoter would provide fewer sleeping quarters than he would girls. For all their drunken abandon, these are smart boys. They like their sex. The more exotic they get it, the happier they are. But they're not going to leave themselves open to blackmail by getting involved in any voyeurism routines.

There's a lot of shouting. You can always count on one of the guests having a foul mouth. You'd never hear the words he uses at a Ladies' Aides picnic.

There's the pincher and the weeper, the feeler and the puncher. Put them all together and you have a good cross-section of Freudian oddballs.

You'd be surprised what happens when they get far gone on the whiskey. Last week they may have appeared on the covers of the country's most important business magazines. Tonight you'd be hard pressed to tell them from the characters you're likely to meet in the sex wing of Creedmore.

A girl like me begins to earn her pay now. I'm only minutes away from accompanying one of the revelers below decks, or to the second floor of the duplex or out to the servants quarters. He isn't going to waste time on the way. By the time he gets a door closed behind us he will have committed all of my vital statistics to his alcoholic memory. And he uses the Braille system to learn.

There's only one house rule for the orgy girl who is in demand. That is anything goes. If she's squeamish or modest, she'll never attend her second clambake. And don't think that because a man holds down a responsible position in industry or government he can't be a sexual creep.

You may not believe it, but here are some of the things I've been asked to do:

Strip down to my black panties and lie across a man's lap while he paddles me with a hair brush.

Beat a man with a rolled up wet turkish towel until he can't catch his breath any longer. (Since it's usually the older ones who go for this, I'm scared they'll die on the spot).

Lie absolutely still on my back with my hands folded across my breasts in the approved corpse position.

Reville a man with the filthiest language one can imagine.

Act out the mother fantasy while a $50,000 a year executive mumbles baby talk against the hollow of my throat.

Play out bondage tableaux in which I alternate between being the passive victim or the active villainess.

AS I've said before, you have to be shock proof to maintain your digestion.

My experiences have taught me that most men are insecure sexually. They all have what the psychiatrists call aberrations. They all want to master a woman younger than themselves. (This is particularly true of men from the ages of 45 and up.) They all may seem like social sophisticates, but they have never grown up when it comes to sex.

Perhaps this is the strangest revelation. It's a real shocker to realize that most American men have been so badly crippled from their very earliest contacts with women that they become sexual misfits.

Take the spanking episodes. You don't have to have a degree in psychiatry to recognize this as a throwback to childhood and the pleasures gained through the chastisement a mother metes out.

Or the bondage playacting. According to my information this is a homosexual manifestation.

Or the corpse routine. Not much different from kids gathering around a bonfire and scaring themselves half to death with their ghost stories.

How strange it is to me to see a three quarters drunken, overweight, underexercised middle aged man climb out of his suit. As he stands there on his spindly legs with his tremendous bay widow, I try to imagine him as the rest of the world sees him. I think of the flunkies of his office running before him in terror. I think of the switchboard operators who cringe at the sound of his voice crackling through the intercom.

Even now he tries to maintain the pose of authority. But there is a pleading expression in his eyes. It's almost as if he's crying out, "Please accept me. Please don't ridicule me. Please take me for a whole man. Please make me believe in myself."

At times like this I feel almost sorry for them. Yes, sorry even for the dirty-mouthed ones, or the ones who ask me to do degrading things. I know how weak and insecure they really are. I see them as their business colleagues have never seen them. I see them as they would never dare show themselves to their wives. I see them unable to control the spasms which run through their muscles. I know the hurt and humiliation they are trying to cover with their false bravado.

ARE all men like the orgy goer? I don't believe so. Just as the orgy girl is a special breed, so is the man who requires her services. He is a heavy drinker. He is weak enough to be easily bribed. He is coward enough to want others to take part in his "sporting" activities even though he demands privacy. He is sexually frustrated enough so that he must rely on bizarre charades. He has long ago lost interest in the simple relationships which represent true sexuality between partners.

What about the orgy girl? I think we're just as badly mixed up. The girl with self confidence will not cater to men old enough to be her father. She will not sell her favors for money or excitement. She will not remain completely cold through the sex act. She will not allow a man to abuse her. She will not become infatuated with the other women she meets.

I believe most of us have been emotionally crippled as children. I've never met a girl like myself who didn't come from an unhappy home. Most of them are the products of smashed households, drunken or brutal fathers. They feel that men abandoned them at an early age. They have a need to get even.

For some the need is satisfied by accepting money for their favors. For others it comes from the sense of superiority they feel over the men they meet. For still others the vengeance stems from the fact that they never offer a man their ultimate gift — unrestrained response.

We're sick in a sick world where everybody who enters play acts a happiness they are doomed never to know.

ing and can induce hallucinations and a disintegration of the nervous system. An overdose can be fatal. Witness the nearly two hundred deaths from overdoses of heroin in New York City during the first three months of this year.

In many cases, these same drugs taken to enhance sexual capacity will have an opposite effect and act as an aphrodisiac, or sexual depressant. One real danger in using such drugs as a passion booster is the possibility of becoming sterile through a complex process which causes spermatozoa to fragmentize.

Despite the perils, people will probably always look for a love potion that works. History is full of references to the never-ending search. If a witch doctor in ancient times said a particular herb made a man more virile and a woman more receptive to love-making, it was an accepted fact. And those who swallowed the strange concoction brainwashed themselves into thinking that it put them in the mood for love.

The Encyclopedia Britannica says, "It should be remembered that a large part of the plants, vegetables, spices, etc. which are supposed to be aphrodisiacs acquired their reputation many centuries ago when there was no scientific information available."

If a plant or vegetable resembled genitalia in the old days it was automatically assumed that it possessed the ingredients to boost sexual prowess. Vanilla, for instance, originally meant vagina (pod or sheath).

The myth about oysters being chock full of aphrodisiacal powers has no basis in fact, and authorities think that the legend may have begun because oysters look and feel like certain parts of the female anatomy.

Medical men say that with the possible exception of fish and perhaps asparagus, both of which have high concentrations of phosphorus, there is no food with chemical agents which could physiologically affect the genito-urinary tract.

But before that fact became known, the romantically inclined believed in the sexual power of some foods. Brillat-Savarin, a Frenchman, wrote: "Whoever says truffles pronounces a great word, sure to awaken sentimental and succulent memories among the sex in petticoats, and succulent and passionate memories among the sex sporting a mustache.

"That distinguished duplication," he said, comes not only because of the delicious taste of truffles but "because it is believed that it increases a power whose exercise is accompanied by the sweetest of pleasures.

"The truffle can, on certain occasions, render women more tender and men more amiable."

Some believers in the power of food say that the ardent love affair between Antony and Cleopatra was helped immeasurably by cookery.

One early writer on the subject claims that plover eggs helped Madame duBarry, who "through her knowledge of the pleasures of love, kept her royal lover plunged into a state of intoxication of the senses bordering on depravity."

BUT BEFORE you toss these examples off as superstitious nonsense, however, there was a small measure of truth in them. Madame duBarry's plover eggs, for example, contained a large quantity of protein. Cleopatra's cooking may have included lots of fish, cheese and some nuts—all of which provide protein. Fifty years ago Havelock Ellis was asked to select the one food that was the most efficient of all nutritional aphrodisiacs. His answer: "Beefsteak is probably as powerful a sex stimulant as any food." Again, a food high in protein.

What's the connection? According to medical science, proteins effect two key glands, the pituitary and the gonads, or testicles. The pituitary gland produces hormones for all parts of the male body, including the gonads which provide the charge that stimulates male sexual activity. If your diet lacks proteins, these two glands won't function to their peak efficiency. Sexual activity in turn will be reduced in direct relationship to the protein deficiency.

It should be noted that while all meats are excellent sources of protein, they lose up to 50 per cent of their effective content if overcooked. Animal brains also provide protein in large quantities, but it should be emphasized that all of these foods are nutritional aphrodisiacs, not true aphrodisiacs. Which means you can't sit down to a steak dinner with side orders of fish, cheese and eggs, and then expect to be a tiger in bed that night. The results of a high protein diet are cumulative. It has to be part of your daily intake over a period of time before you begin to notice better performance.

Doctors agree that the most important contributor to sexual vigor is a well-rounded diet. Once you neglect your body nutritionally, the result is certain to be a cutback in your sexual desires and potency.

Dr. A. P. Keys proved that point in an experiment which he reported in his book, "The Biology of Human Starvation." Dr. Keys worked with a group of World War II conscientious objectors who volunteered to live on a starvation diet of 1,470 calories a day for six months.

The doctor reported that after just two weeks all normal sexual activity among the men came to an abrupt halt. Sex dreams and fantasies, both of which are normal sexual releases for men deprived of the opposite sex, were first to disappear. Next, all self-gratification among the group stopped. Finally, the starved men lost all interest in the opposite sex, even when they were treated to the sight of a beautiful woman.

Not long after these men were put back on a regulation 3,000-calorie daily diet, their sexual interests and activities were restored.

ALTHOUGH NOT classed as aphrodisiacs, there are several specific foods that have a direct effect on your potency. All of them contain either several of the B vitamins or E vitamin.

Especially effective as sexual stimulators are three B vitamins—choline, vitamin B-6 (or pyridoxine), and pantothenic acid. Some of the best known sources of the B vitamins are wheat germ, egg yolks, animal brains, kidneys, beans, yeast, unpolished rice, soybeans and peanuts.

No other vitamin, however, is found in such vast quantities and concentrations as vitamin E. This is the all-important sex vitamin and its greatest concentration is in the pituitary gland, adrenal and sex glands.

To stay healthy you're supposed to consume about 150 milligrams of vitamin E every day. Chances are you don't. In most diets you don't even get 100 milligrams. What's more, you lose an astronomical amount of this vital substance every time you ejaculate. Without the ammunition for which vitamin E is a major source, you are sure to become physically incapable of achieving full sexual satisfaction.

Experiments conducted at Columbia University show that large doses of the vitamin given to men over their lifetime helped to keep their bodies youthful in appearance and aided in the maintenance of an active sexual life well past middle age.

Excellent vitamin E sources are soybean, wheat germ, cotton seed, peanut oil, butter, eggs, oatmeal, brown rice, brown breads, navy beans, peas, olives, turnip tops, tomatoes, asparagus, cauliflower, spinach, lettuce, plums, figs and dates.

You can't get a doctor to prescribe aphrodisiacs for a lagging libido, but what he may do is give you injections of the synthetic male hormone, testosterone. The drug's effects are numerous. Not only does it increase the eroticization of the sex centers, but it will stimulate the prostate gland and the seminal vesicles.

Dr. J. P. Pratt in the Journal of Clinical Endocrinology tells of one man who increased his sexual virility several times over within 12 to 36 hours after an injection of the hormone.

It's been proved, too, that older men who have entered their climacteric, or male change of life, can often benefit from injections or pills containing testosterone.

Most people concede that so-called love potions are really powerless and can even cause harm. Yet millions buy them with the hope that they'll see a miracle performed. Americans buy them because they want to be the best in everything they do, and that includes sex.

Dr. Albert Ellis, director of the Institute of Advanced Study in Rational Psychotherapy brought that point out when he said, "We have this nutty notion of being great in anything we do or try, and this applies to sex."

That's probably the reason shops all over the country are doing a thriving business in sales of exotic oils and herbs which are supposed to stimulate sexual desire. You can get such items as Cleopatra Oil, Compelling Oil, Indian love powder, Hi John the Conqueror Root and other "potency restorers." The products are prepared from formulas handed down from generation to generation. Some are sniffed, some are rubbed, some sprinkled and some drunk. Advocates insist they do the job. Medical men say that if they work it's because of psychological reasons.

The owner of an oil and herb shop in Greenwich Village, New York fancies himself as a guru of love and claims that "some people swear by these love herbs and powders." One of his faster selling items is a Korean root called Ginseng. He says it's a powerful body builder and restorator of sexual prowess. The Ginseng package, however, makes no such claim. It suggests only that it is an "effective demulcent for minor throat irritations."

The proprietor of another shop in New York admits that he peddles his potions with tongue in cheek and says that his business is especially brisk with the 30-to-40-year-old set. He says that there are "love teas" made from Ginseng, wine onions and watermelon juice. "It's a state of mind, not body," he feels. "When people have that kind of feeling it doesn't matter what they take. It could be aspirin."

THE ONE thing that's really needed in the field of aphrodisiacs is scientific investigation. Studies should be made to determine how close to being right the witch doctors were in proclaiming certain herbs, or if they were off base entirely. It must be remembered that the primitive doctors and holy men of India prescribed a drug extracted from the root of the plant Rauwolfia Serpentina as a pain killer and a sex stimulant. The more cynical might put it down as being wholly unfounded and nothing more than the superstitions of old men. Yet that same drug today is called reserpine and is the basic ingredient of a whole school of drugs known as tranquilizers.

Doctors will tell you that a tranquilizer can work wonders for the patient who is impatient because his job or social life creates tensions that reflect in his sexual activity. Like testosterone, the drug should only be administered at the discretion of a reputable physician.

For years Haitians have used a vine called pego pelo as a cure for impotency. Dr. Norman Farnsworth, dean of the pharmaceutical college at the University of Pittsburgh, has experimented with rats and has found that pego pelo didn't do much for the rodents' love life. But he admits that his research was not complete and that his findings "don't mean it doesn't work for Haitians. I'm not convinced that there's not something there," he adds. "The sexual behavior of human beings and rats cannot be compared."

Another love potion that needs investigating is the horn of the rhinoceros, pulverized and mixed with wine. Is it really an aphrodisiac? The premise hasn't been proved scientifically, but so many people buy it that a hunter gets $1,200 or more for a rhino horn.

The centuries-old search for a true aphrodisiac almost ended recently when a side-effect of an experimental drug called L-dopa was noted. L-dopa has been used with some success on patients afflicted with Parkinson's disease.

Dr. William E. O'Malley, a Georgetown University neurologist, revealed his startling findings in an interview before the opening of a one-day symposium on "The Pharmacology of L-dopa."

He reported that some men "in their 60s and 70s," being treated with L-dopa, suddenly had more sexual vigor than men in their twenties.

The Maryland neurologist cited the case of one male Parkinson's patient who had been treated with L-dopa:

"He had been virtually paralyzed for many years," said O'Malley. "But after treatment with L-dopa it was so bad that nurses started going into his room twice a time, as a precaution—but he started chasing the two of them."

"We've also had some male patients in their 60s and 70s who hadn't had sexual intercourse for five years—but who started having intercourse at least once a day, some of them twice daily."

The doctor said that at least "20 other investigators" had told him privately that some of their L-dopa treated patients had demonstrated similar hypersexuality.

"At first we felt we ought to keep this quiet," O'Malley said. "But now most of us feel that it ought to be published because of the possibility of engendering studies, at some later date, of the possible, controlled use of L-dopa as a treatment for frigidity and impotence."

The findings so far indicate that the drug induces hypersexuality, a marked increase in sexuality, in certain women who have been diagnosed as frigid, or incapable of experiencing normal pleasure in sexual intercourse.

Is L-dopa a true aphrodisiac? Not quite. The discouraging note is that only

2 per cent of the patients treated with the drug have had increases in sexual activity. The others have experienced no change at all.

All the studies, if they do materialize, may prove what most of us have surmised all along—that no true love potion exists. Dr. Sanford L. Steelman, director of endocrine research at Merck, Sharp and Dohme Laboratories, says: "I am not aware of any true aphrodisiac." The best prescription, he says, is "a good-looking blonde."

He's probably right.

worlds. "Smooth traders" are referred to by their paramours as proteges. In print the term often used is 'friend and confidante.'

Such liaisons, however, rarely last. The promiscuous nature of male prostitutes won't permit long affairs. They are constantly looking for greener fields. The invert, usually middle-aged, successful in their fields and wealthy, know this and are forever tormented by the thought that they will lose their proteges to younger and richer homosexuals.

For this reason they are likely to become lavish in their treatment of male prostitutes. They may even submit to the smooth traders' attempts at blackmail. There are on record cases in which homosexuals have turned over their entire life-savings to young extortionists to prevent them from seeking other relationships.

Occasionally, a homosexual will kill or commit suicide because of the pressure exerted by blackmailers. But such aggressive action is rare. The reason is outlined in Donald Webster Cory's book, The Homosexual in America:

"Few suicides are homosexuals, and few homosexuals commit suicide. Perhaps homosexuals are so accustomed to the slings and arrows of a life in which they have been buffeted from one difficulty to another that they find it easy to accept a philosophical approach to the torments of human existence. Never having a day or a moment completely free from the burdens of life, they become immune to its most dreadful moments and do not succumb to the lure of self-imposed finality."

Nevertheless, suicide does occur among invert. It almost always precedes public exposure or follows a scandal which destroys the homosexuals' efforts to conceal their true sexual tastes. Two members of the nationwide extortion ring mentioned earlier posed as New York City detectives and walked into the Pentagon. They came out later escorted by a high ranking officer. The man had been shaken down for several thousand dollars. He was scheduled to

IS IT POSSIBLE?

Automatic Income for Life of $20,000... $10,000...$5,000 a Year... Without Working ...for a Business That Runs Itself!

"I'll show you dozens of plans you can start easily—without investing a cent!"
says Ty Hicks.

Dear Reader:

Did you ever stop to think how great it would be to have an automatic income for the rest of your life—an income that goes on whether you work or not? An income of $200...$400...$800...$1,000 a week? To come to do what you please? Believe it or not, there are actually scores of businesses that could be bringing you a fortune, without your lifting a finger! Easy, proven, money-making businesses that practically run themselves—to give you extra income without work! All you bring to them is a little ingenuity and the step-by-step methods outlined in this book.

Furthermore, you can get into many of these businesses, in your spare time—and build a fortune fast—starting with no money of your own! That's right! An automatic income, without investing a cent!

For Example—

- I'd like to tell you about a method a former blue-collar worker uses—requiring no equipment other than a pencil and paper, and no special skills. He helps other businesses get started. As part of his fee, he becomes a "silent partner" in each business. Today he has an income of more than $50,000 a year, from some 18 businesses. Yet he doesn't work even a minute a month at any of them!
- In another spectacular fortune-making method, all you do is make up company names, and sell them to companies that need names. Using this method, one fortune builder sold nearly $300,000 worth of corporate names in 6 months. And in the next six months, she sold $237,700 worth of names!
- And I'd like to show you how another fortune builder acquired a business that practically runs itself—a parking lot—without spending a cent of his own, even though he was a real estate agent. Today, he owns 14 parking lots. His net income from each lot is $15,000 per year, giving him a total net income of $210,000 per year! You'll find the full details in a new book which I have written—an eye-opening, profit-laden book that shows you a dazzling array of powerful, proven, money-making opportunities...90% of which require little or no cash, and even less effort!

How To Borrow Your Way To A Great Fortune!

Everywhere I go in this world I meet successful, wealthy people. Were you to travel with me, you'd meet these rich people in the best hotels, the finest restaurants, exclusive clubs, and the highest resorts.

What's more, you'd learn a great secret from these wealth builders.

- Nearly every person who built great wealth for himself in recent years did so with little or no cash and wound up with a lot of money!
- If you met these people, as I have, you'd soon be convinced that the best way to build a fortune today is by using OPM—other people's money. It is the most powerful, the greatest key to fast riches, starting with little or no cash, known in the world today!

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Ty Hicks has built several fortunes for himself and others, using the methods he gives you in this book. Today he has several "automatic" incomes going for him. "Automatic" because he spends less than two days a week, supervising his businesses—with ample time for travel, entertainment, hobbies!

During his career, Mr. Hicks has made money in hotels, apartment houses, rental real estate, boating, shipping, publishing, amusements, the stock market, and theater, to name a few. More amazing still, he began his search for wealth with no contacts, no private fortune, his father having died when Mr. Hicks was only 14.

In this book you'll find scores of tried and proven ways to borrow money quickly, and use it to build a fortune.

- Whether you're a man or woman, old, young, married, unmarried...Even if you haven't got a job...or are a member of a minority group...or have no permanent residence...these techniques will work for you! You'll discover...
- How you can get up to $5,000 easily on your signature alone, even if you have been refused before!
- How you can get up to $5,000 for as little as $8 a month!
- How you can get as many as six signature loans, for $5,000 each—in ONE DAY—for a total of $30,000!
- How you can get a large sum of money—thousands of dollars—that does not have to be repaid, is interest-free, tax-free, and can be used for any business purpose, including your salary!
- Over 10,000 ready sources of cash for you (many by mail)!

I'll show you how to use a loan as your springboard to riches! For unlike a car or TV set, which doesn't pay you anything back, except pleasure, a business loan will often pay you a PROFIT of $50, $100, $200 or more PER WEEK! Put these wealth-studded tips to work and you can soon be richer than you ever thought possible.

Fantastic Fortune-Making Bargains!

- There are unbelievably powerful fortune-making bargains available to you today. Opportunities—open to everyone—that you can take advantage of, with little or no cash, that can stuff wads of profit dollars in your pocket, quickly and easily! For example, you'll discover...
- How a $23,500 split-level home was purchased for only $180.22—and sold for thousands of dollars profit!
- How a 21-room mansion on 13 waterfront acres was purchased for only $98.18!
- How a $12,000 farm-style home was purchased for $5.11!
- How you may "mortgage out"—a technique that gives you ownership of a property with no money down and with a cash payment to you! Incredible as it seems, these opportunities are in your local area right now! You don't need any kind of "luck" to find them. I'll show you exactly how to find such fortune-making bargains right away, in the pages of my book. Just apply a little imagination to fit them into your own situation—and you're on your way to a fortune like these.

Shortcuts That Zoom Your Income!

- You can, by using the methods in this book, make yourself a millionaire. Others have done exactly that. I've watched them.
- Cliff R. using the secret just mentioned above, Cliff purchased and sold some 25 properties in a six-month period. His profit on these deals was $68,000!
- Sam T. used another one of the sources revealed in this book to get $400. He invested this money in valuable postage stamps, and sold them to fellow stamp club members. Within 3 years, he was worth $300,000!
- You'll see how Larry M. got the money he needed to buy $14,000 worth of paintings. In 2 years, he was offered almost FIVE TIMES as much for them. But Larry waited another year and sold them for more than SIX TIMES the purchase price: $100,000. This is a neat income—particularly when you remember that Larry didn't invest a cent of his own!
- Ben D. considered such a poor credit risk that six banks had refused him time after time, used this book revealed in this book to get a $50,000 five-year loan in less than 30 minutes! He used this money to buy a restaurant. Today, he has five booming restaurants, and more money than he can spend!
- Joel L. started with a gas station which he took over, using one of the many easy loans I tell you about. Once Joel had the gas station, he began to look around for other easy-money

- businesses. Soon he had a real estate office, a pet shop, a hardware store, a second gas station, and a laundry! His net income from these businesses was $75,000 the first year!
- Herb F. was a mailman for the Post Office, in a little town in the Midwest. Using the method I tell you about—for obtaining large sums of money for as little as $8 a month—he obtained $40,000 without putting up a cent! He used this money to buy a $60,000 motel. Today he's on easy street after only a few weeks!
- Clint T. couldn't stand the 9-to-5 routine of his job. He decided he had to make a pile of money as quickly as possible. Using one of the sources revealed in this book, he borrowed $2,000 and invested it in a meat business. In less than 2 months, he made a profit of $12,300—OR OVER $200 PER DAY FOR DOING NOTHING, while he had other people's money invested!

I Want To Tell You All About These—

And Many Other—"Automatic Income" Opportunities Entirely At My Risk! Like This:

There are hundreds of other profitable deals you can set up, using this ready cash! You'll learn about all of them in my book. I'll show you how to get into a business that's...

- Simple to run! • Gives an immediate income!
- ...and give you an automatic income for the rest of your life, perhaps! An income that goes on whether you work or not! Prove it yourself, entirely at my risk!

testify before a New York County grand jury. The night before his appearance he committed suicide.

Homosexuals are well acquainted with the fact that blackmail is an evil from which they will never escape. The extortion ring now under investigation may have been larger in scope, but it is no more vicious than others which have preceded it or those that will follow it.

Back in 1940, Thomas E. Dewey, then District Attorney of New York County, smashed a ring of extortionists who had been preying on homosexuals in and around New York City for more than twenty years. Some of the victims had paid as much as $85,000 for silence. An informer who had helped Dewey in his crack-down later became an active black-mailer. He selected his victims from Dun and Bradstreet reports. Before he was apprehended and sent to prison, he had shaken down one victim for $20,000.

In 1960, New York County District Attorney Frank S. Hogan (also in charge of the current investigation) uncovered a blackmail ring using the same method of operation as the 1940 gang. Police called them the "Squeeze Squad," because the gang had "squeezed" victims out of amounts from $500 to $10,000.

Revelations made in this latest probe indicate that the extortionists' MO never varies. A decoy, known as a "chicken" sets up the compromising situation with the homosexual. He is an expert at knowing when and how to lure his man into a hotel room. At the right time, two or three other members of the ring burst in and flash shields. The bogus policemen "arrest" the chicken and indicate to the homosexual that the incident is certain to generate publicity. At this point the invert is ready to put up "bail money" for his new-found friend.

OCCASIONALLY, the decoy works alone. After luring his man into a room, he assaults him and steals his credentials and his money. The credentials are then sent to phony policemen who will apply pressure to the homosexual at a later date. It was revealed in the latest probe that a New York businessman had been beaten up in Chicago. His identification papers had been stolen. When he had returned to New York some time later he was greeted by two bogus detectives who told him they were members of the Chicago police force. They showed him his credentials. The man gave them $2,000.

Unfortunately, there is little risk connected with the racket. Our era of affluence also makes it lucrative for those who are in it. We hear about the large gangs that are smashed, but there are many small operations that continue to prey on invers all across the country. Some multn no more than a few hundred dollars from their victims. Others, more daring or operating in more fashionable communities, demand thousands. Many of the extortionists skip from city to city to keep one step ahead of the law. All gang members and individual blackmailers feel secure because they know that invers are not likely to report blackmail to police. The reasoning here is that homosexuals have no guarantee under present laws that action will not be taken against them because of the homosexual offenses their complaints may bring to light.

Statistics on the number of extortionists operating in this country are impossible to compile. In Britain, however, where there are an estimated one million homosexuals, it has been determined that 90 per cent of all blackmail cases are connected with homosexuality.

One of the committee's recommendations was that "except for some grave reason, proceedings be not instituted in respect of homosexual offenses incidentally revealed in the course of investigating allegations of blackmail."

Ironically, the committee's recommendations with respect to prostitution were promptly accepted by legislators and became laws; those recommendations dealing with homosexuality, as practiced by two consenting adults in private, is not a crime.

SUGGESTIONS on how to cope with blackmailers were offered recently by Donald E. J. MacNamara, dean of the New York Institute of Criminology. He told a group of homosexuals to confess rather than meet a blackmailers' demands. "They (parents, teachers and employers) will be more understanding and helpful than you suspect." He cautioned them to "stay away from your usual haunts and activities, your favorite bar, the park or street where you have been making pickups. Pick your companions carefully. Don't divulge your identity unnecessarily, don't write homosexual love notes or have pictures taken in drag (female clothes), and don't make an ostentatious display of money, jewels or other evidences of wealth."

Generally, homosexuals find it difficult to confess. Most would rather take their chances with extortionists and continue in their endless search for sexual outlets. Some try to elude blackmailers by moving to suburban communities. Actually, there is far less tolerance toward sexual deviation in suburbia where there are at least as many unscrupulous characters ready to shake down vulnerable homosexuals as there are in cities. And oddly enough, it is the homosexuals' own lust for sexual variety—whether in cities or suburbs—that usually triggers blackmail schemes.

Not long ago two inverters moved to a suburb of Chicago with the hope that they would escape the demands of blackmailers. They were prominent businessmen who were anxious to maintain a conventional front while indulging themselves in homosexual activities. They bought a home and lived together for a few months in comparative peace and harmony.

Like most homosexual affairs, this one waned. They didn't get tired of each other, but they did want additional thrills they could share together.

They went to a local tavern on a Saturday night and picked up a "townie." They brought the seedy character to their luxurious home. Hours later, he was given a few dollars, a bottle of whiskey and asked to leave.

The inverters were asleep when their guest returned. He was accompanied by three heavy-set men.

Outside, a moving van had backed up to the front door.

The businessmen woke up. They tried to resist. They were not effeminate and put up a good fight. But the four intruders kicked and beat them into unconsciousness. When the men came to they discovered that everything had been taken—costly furnishings, rugs, curtains, drapes, divans and jewelry.

The inverters hired a lawyer. Charges were brought against the four men. The ringleader immediately brought countercharges against the businessmen, accusing them on a morals count. Local newspapers picked up the story. Fearing a scandal, the homosexuals arranged for an out-of-court settlement. They agreed not to press for the return of the furniture if their opponent dropped his morals charge.

Both attorneys agreed. That should have been the end of it, but it wasn't. The presence of reporters and photographers outside the court caused the inverters to panic. They requested that the case be adjourned for a week. Their wish was granted, but the case never came to trial. The attorney for the inverters was advised that the hearing could only bring ruinous scandal to his clients. He was told that the hearing would be dropped if the homosexuals placed their house on the market and left town.

Police in many suburban areas report similar cases. All point up the fact that there is no escape for homosexuals. Until the law is drastically changed, until homosexuals find the courage to confess to their loved ones, they will always be subjected to the schemes of blackmailers and the savage punishments of those who beat and rob them for their money.

civilian killed, one hundred men also taken from the place where the incident occurred will be shot.

Should several soldiers or civilians be killed or wounded, all the men of the place will be shot, the place set on fire, the women interned.

One crazy act by Giovanni Avezzano would turn Rome into a blood bath.

As she stared from her window at the scene unfolding below, she realized how terrible things were. Already units of the Feld Gendarmerie had sealed off all exits to Via Rasella. They paid no attention to the crumbled heaps on the pavement. Even those who still clawed the cobblestones and whimpered for aid were left in the filthy gutter to fend for themselves.

The Nazi mentality was more geared to vengeance than to rescue. New screams filled the air as men and women were dragged brutally from houses and forced to line up with their hands clasped behind their necks.

Old men protested bitterly that they were innocent of any crime. Mothers tried to hide their children behind their skirts, but the Nazis were having none of it.

Kessler strutted on the street below, barking orders. Off in the distance a siren sounded. Within seconds a convoy of half tracks and trucks rolled up.

A Nazi rifleman used the butt of his weapon as a club. Those unfortunate enough to occupy positions in his path felt the brunt of his attack. They staggered towards the trucks, still not able to comprehend what was happening to them.

Anna gasped for breath. It was as if a huge cancerous lump had formed in her throat and was choking away her life. From an alley she saw two storm troopers dragging Giovanni Avezzano into the center of the square. His head was bloody and he seemed scarcely able to stand up.

Kessler moved towards the young Italian. He seemed more interested in Giovanni than in the other hostages. The instinct of the bloodhound seemed to tell him that here was a prize catch.

The sturmbannfuhrers whistled sharply and a Kommand car was brought up. As Anna watched, Giovanni's hands were manacled before him and he was shoved into the vehicle. Kessler returned to supervising the last stages of the roundup.

Anna moved back from the window. Her eyes swam with tears. She saw Lucia standing before her, her hand clutching the collar of her negligee around her throat. Underneath the single garment, Lucia Rossano was stark naked.

She moved past Anna and lowered the shade. She looked searchingly at Anna, not wanting to ask the question she knew must be answered.

"They have Giovanni," Anna told her. Her voice was flat and emotionless. "They took him away separately."

"What does that mean?"
ANNA spread her fingers before her. She examined the highly polished nails. She delayed the moment as long as possible. Lucia stared at her. The dark-haired girl's face was pale. Her firm young breasts moved against her negligee. She clutched her arms around her, tensing her body to still its shivering.

"Call Sophia and Maria," Anna murmured. We will all have to work together."

Heavily, Lucia rose. She clutched the bed post for support. Her little teeth bit into her lip. She stared at Anna for a long moment. Then she moved past her.

The sound of Lucia's mules tapping down the highly polished corridor reminded Anna of the muffled roll of funeral drums.

"Giovanni, you fool!" she cried to the empty room. "What have you accomplished with all your bravery."

Her mind turned backwards, stopping at that time in 1940 when there had been no war and even a woman of the streets could enjoy life.

She remembered the first time she had met Giovanni Avezzano. From the start he'd been different. He hadn't hustled her back to her flat. Instead he had strolled quietly with her, listening to the sounds of a Roman spring, talking of all manner of things, even stopping at a small cafe to buy her a bottle of wine.

"You are not a man, you are a poet," Anna had teased. Immediately she had been sorry when she saw the pained expression flit over his face. She had not wanted to be cruel. And yet she had.

Something touched her deep. The shy student from the University of Milan was like no man she had ever met. He did not paw her legs under the table. He did not smell of garlic. Instead of being crude, he seemed reverent.

"Come, bambino," she'd cried, cupping his chin in her palms and drawing his face to hers. "Anna Mancuso has much to teach you."

A tear touched her cheek now as she recalled him mounting the steps behind her that first time. His eyes had been large and he'd been so very fearful.

She'd locked the door behind her and stood with her back pressed against it. Giovanni stood, licking his lips, not knowing what he was expected to do next.

Slowly she'd strode towards him, her hips rolling seductively.

She'd taken his hands in hers and moved them upwards over her body, delighting in the flood of agitation which spread over Giovanni's face.

"And now, Bambino, Anna will show you what a woman looks like," she'd cried as she'd ripped her dress over her head and stood before him clad in black silk bra and panties and sheer silk stockings.

When it was over, Giovanni had been filled with concern. "Was I too brutal? Did I cause you pain?" he asked.

Anna had clutched the naked boy to her bosom and laughed heartily. "Can a lamb trample on a tigress?" she'd asked.

Giovanni had grown quickly into manhood. He'd joined an anti-Fascist organization and in time had come to lead a unit of it. On his frequent visits to Anna, he would scold and plead for her to take more interest in politics.

"I know nothing of Il Duce or the Fascisti. I care less. I work hard. I buy you nice presents. Isn't that enough? Doesn't that make you happy?"

HED sit before his naked benefactress, his face screwed up with the effort of putting his thoughts into words. "How can one live for himself alone in a world that has gone mad? How can one be happy when he knows at this very minute people are disappearing from their homes and will never be seen again?"

She recalled these little speeches and she could not be angry with Giovanni any longer. He had done what he had had to do. It was as necessary to him as eating or breathing or coming to Anna Mancuso's whore house.

Perhaps if she had refused to join the partisans things might be different now. But Giovanni had cast a spell over Anna and her girls.

She remembered the first time Giovanni had seen a German in her house. "To give yourself to such filthy swine. There aren't enough lire in the world. There isn't enough perfume in the world to cover up the stench of death which hangs over your house," he'd roared.

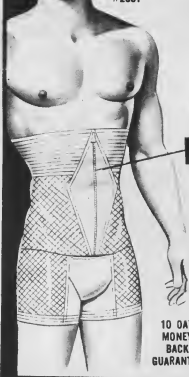

"You go on like a fool. How can we survive without taking German customers? They control Rome, they control Il Duce, how can we fight them."

A look of crafty cunning had come into Giovanni's eyes. His voice had become low—almost a whisper. "By serving them. By listening to everything they have to say. By remembering it and passing it on to me."

And the agreement had been hammered out. Anna Mancuso's house had become the nerve center of the local partisans. Although she had been reluctant at first, Anna had found the life filled with zest. She and her three girls had learned much. She had quivered with delight at the way Giovanni had received her information.

The boy had changed, too. He had grown hard and strong. His love-making had become assured and masterful. He demanded much of Anna and she responded willingly.

A new image appeared before her now. It was the night when Giovanni had spoken in the darkness. "The Nazis have sent Kessler to Rome. He is their top general. They expect an Allied invasion at any time. They are scared and they will stop at nothing."

"Let us not talk of ugly things now."

"We must, Anna. This is an ugly world—a world where men lose their courage and sell their souls to ease the pain. If I should sell my soul under torture, a thousand people might die."

"You betray us?" Anna was incredulous.

"I am weak. I cannot vouch that I won't. I want you to promise that if I am ever in a position where my remaining alive will threaten our mission, I will die by your hand."

She'd rolled over to face him in the dark. Like a mother trying to soothe a nightmare-ridden child, she'd placed his head against her soft breast and held him tightly. Neither had spoken another word.

And now the time had come. Maria and Sophia read it in Anna's eyes as they filed into the room. They stood silently.

Anna had difficulty clearing her throat. "Kessler will return tonight. We must know where Giovanni is being held. He was taken separately from the others," she said. "Kessler must not interfere with us."

Although none of the four of them mentioned Giovanni's execution, all of their energy was directed towards a plan of effecting it.

At nine o'clock, Obersturmbannführer Otto Kessler returned to Anna Mancuso's house. He was in an ugly mood. Sicherheitsdienst had been unsympathetic to his report of action taken against the terrorists.

He mumbled about their lack of understanding as Anna sat on his lap, refilling his glass from the bottle on the table. "I have ordered mass executions in the morning," he growled. "But that is not enough. They want the actual perpetrators."

Anna leaned heavily on him, letting him sense the heady aroma of the perfume she'd dabbed into the hollow between her breasts.

"But I saw you on the street. I saw how efficient you were in your roundups. Certainly you must have caught some important fish in your net."

She waited breathlessly. Was Kessler drunk enough? He burped, rubbed his hand across his thin lips. His watery eye regarded her from behind its monocle.

"They are nothing, merely rubble who happened to be in the area. We could interrogate them until there was no flesh left on their bones and they would tell us nothing. Not because they are brave, but because they know nothing."

Anna rose and stretched lazily. She moved her fingers through her hair, slowly cupped her palms, and ran them down the circumference of her breasts. They met at the clasps which held her dress. Kessler was sweating as he studied the display of abandon. The dress cascaded around Anna's ankles.

The obersturmbannführer staggered out of his chair. His arms locked behind Anna. She felt the insistent fingers pushing against the small of her back, caressing her hips under the shimmering silk of her black panties. Slowly she stepped away from him, bating him with his own desire.

"But there was one—the one you took away in the car all by himself."

Otto Kessler grinned and it was as if the devil himself were in the room. "That one is tough, but he will crack. We have our ways. After a night in my basement, he will spill everything he knows. The only question is how much does he really know? He doesn't look like much. But he's our best prospect."

So here it was, laid right out for Anna. Giovanni had been taken to his basement situated outside of Rome. It must become his tomb.

In the darkness, Kessler was brutal and Anna fought not to cry out against the pain he inflicted. The man drank incessantly, even during his lusting.

When it was over, he lay back on the bed, watching Anna don her clothes. He lurched up at her once more. His feet tangled in the spread and he pitched forward on his face.

The moment had come. Laughingly, Anna slung his arm over her shoulder and guided him down the steps to the narrow alley below. She heard a soft whistle behind her.

Lucia moved with the grace of a jungle cat. The long bladed knife she held creased the flesh of Kessler's neck. Outside the alley they could hear the sounds of Polizei guard troops clomping over the cobblestones.

In his drunkenness, Kessler started to cry out. Lucia's knife dug deeper. "Your uniform jacket, Signor!" she hissed. Already Sophia was working at the brass buttons. The garment came off in her trembling fingers. Quickly she donned it.

THE Polizei detachment came nearer. The women could hear the troops' labored breathing. Anna nodded to Maria. The girl moved behind Kessler, the heavy wrench upraised. The Nazi's head made the sound of an over-ripe melon being squashed. Bits of splintered bone showed ragged and red through his scalp. A grayish red syrup oozed through the wound.

Quickly they loaded the dead German into the back seat of the Mercedes limousine and piled in after him. Sophia slid behind the wheel. Desperately they prayed that the outline of a uniformed driver and the official pennants which flew from the car's fenders would be enough to satisfy the Nazi patrols.

They waited as Anna retraced her steps into the house. Within seconds she returned carrying a heavy valise.

tioned the interrogation rooms he kept in the basement for stubborn prisoners. The move was obviously to curry favor with his superiors who smiled happily at Kessler's "dedication to duty."

Anna opened the suitcase and worked furiously at a set of dials which protruded from a large metal box. The timing mechanism was set for 4 minutes.

Another guard at the gate saw the Mercedes approaching.

Even as the car rolled to a stop, Anna could hear the mindless shrieks coming from the basement below. The sounds were more animal than human. She wanted to clap her hands over her ears to blot them out. She knew that she would carry them with her for the rest of her life.

There was no turning back now. The plan was impossible. Yet it had to work.

An enlisted man approached the car and opened the rear door. In the darkness, he made out the dead Obersturmbannführer Otto Kessler entwined in Maria's arms. The bashed in skull was well hidden from him.

Anna spoke imperiously to the man. "The Obersturmbannführer is accompanying us to a party. I will return with him later. In the meantime, you will keep my clothes here. I may be staying awhile."

"Jawohl, Fraulein," the guard grunted as he lifted the heavy suitcase and saluted smartly. He glanced once over his shoulder at the officer who had his own driver and a back seat full of women to do his bidding. The sentry shook his head ever so slightly.

Now they were racing down the gravel path again, through the gate, out over the main road. Even here they could hear the sounds filtering through the night from the basement.

It came as a rumble at first and then the sky flashed orange and red. Huge timbers flopped over in the sky, their ends burning fiercely.

Giovanni Avezzano would feel no more pain.

Hours later, the car with its grisly contents was ditched in a ravine, its gas tanks aflame. Then and only then could Anna Mancuso take time to weep for her fallen lover. END
